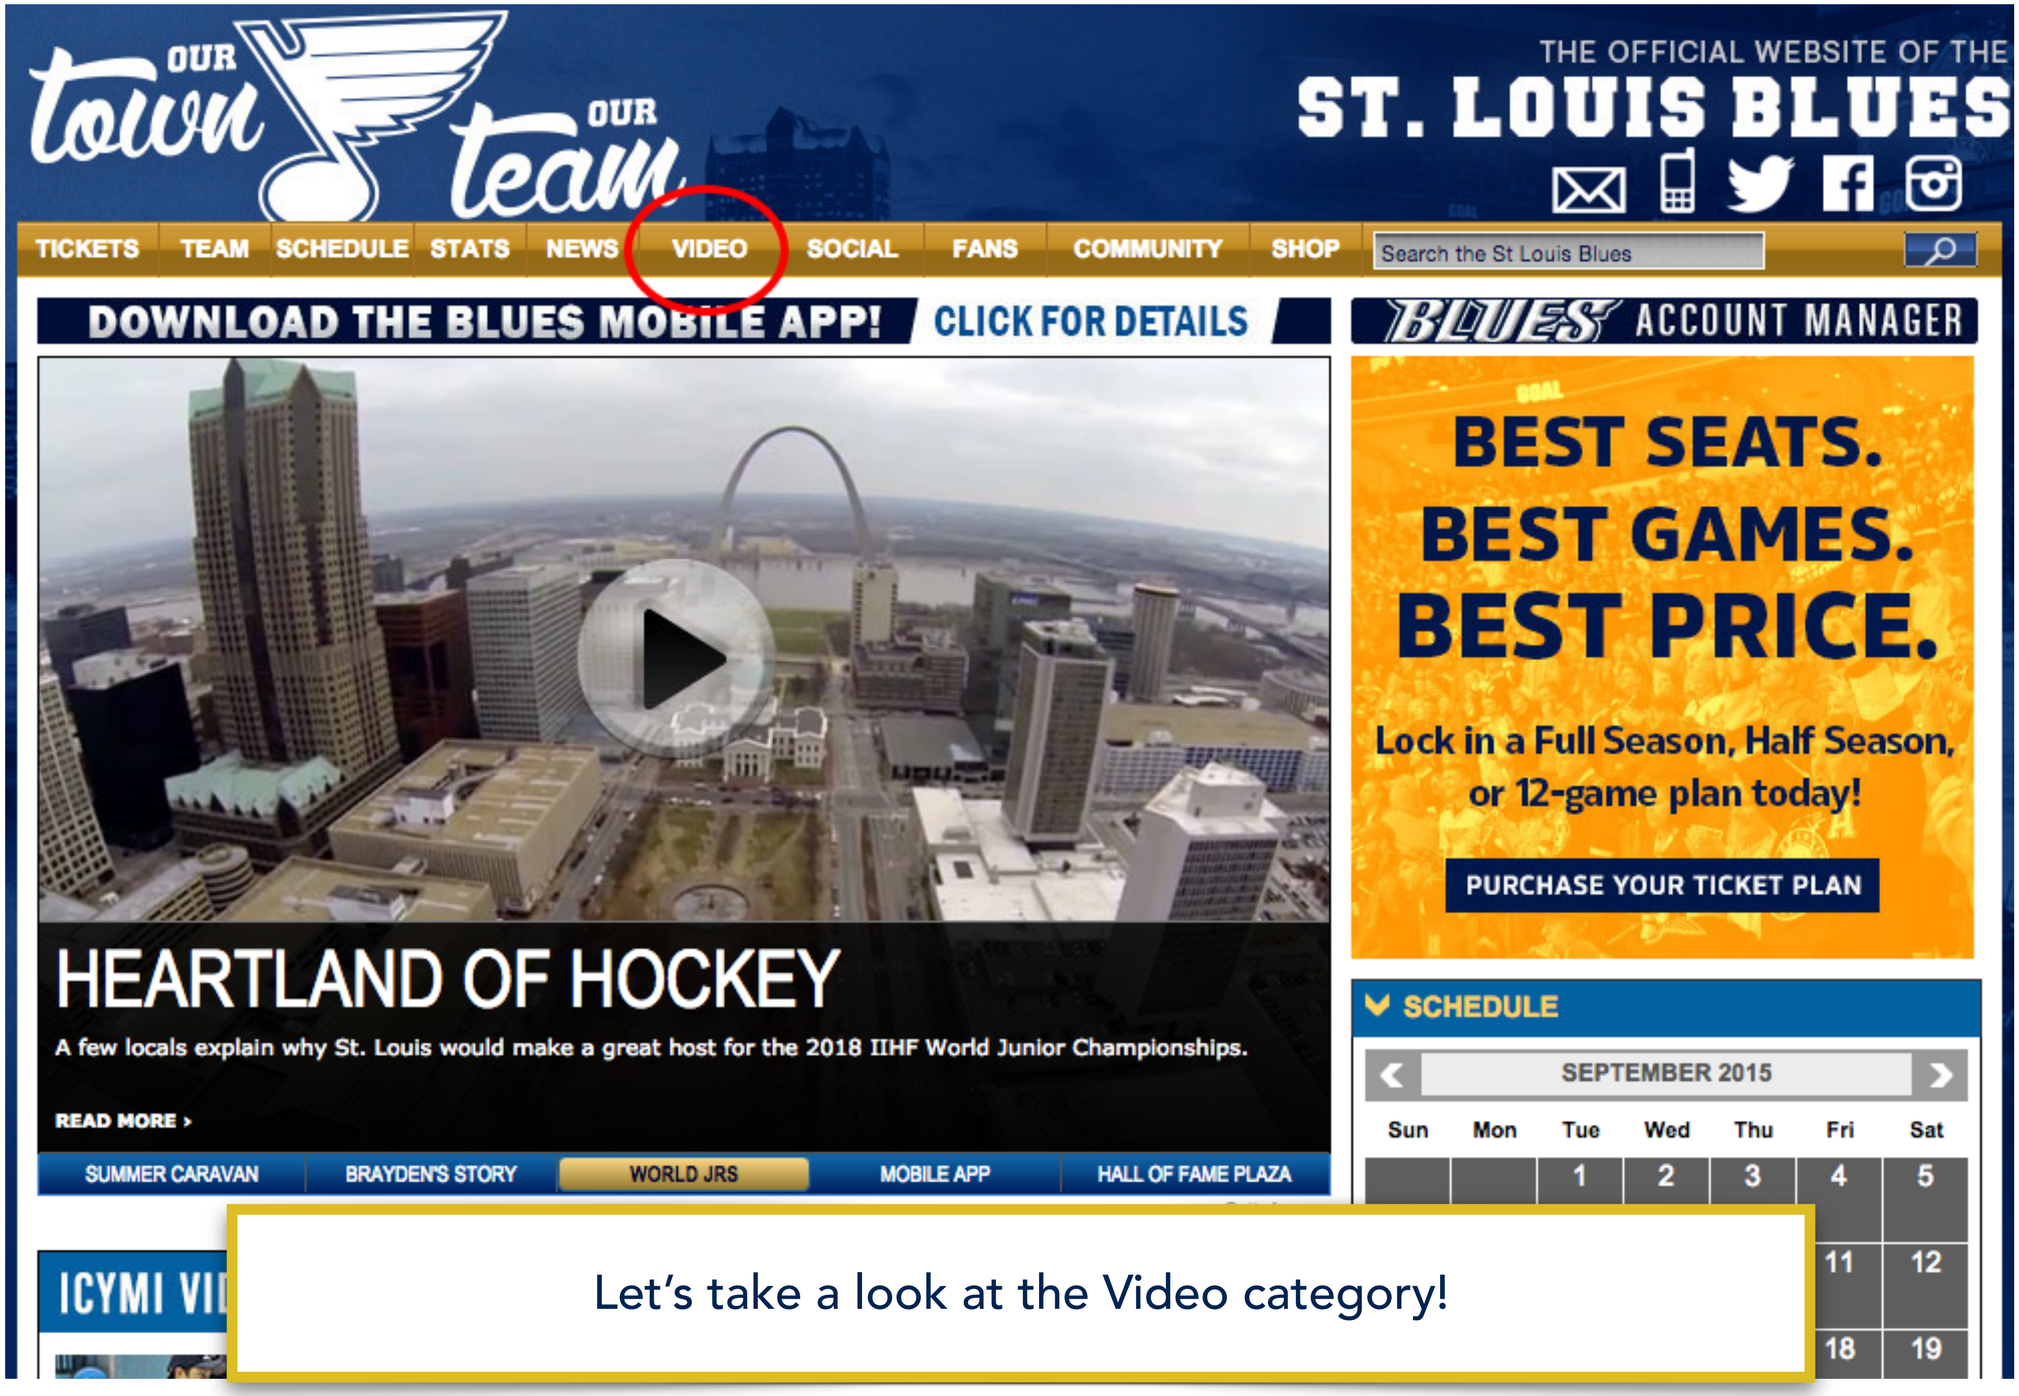
Teardown Time!

[Featuring the St. Louis Blues VideoCenter]

Here is the official National Hockey League St. Louis Blues website.



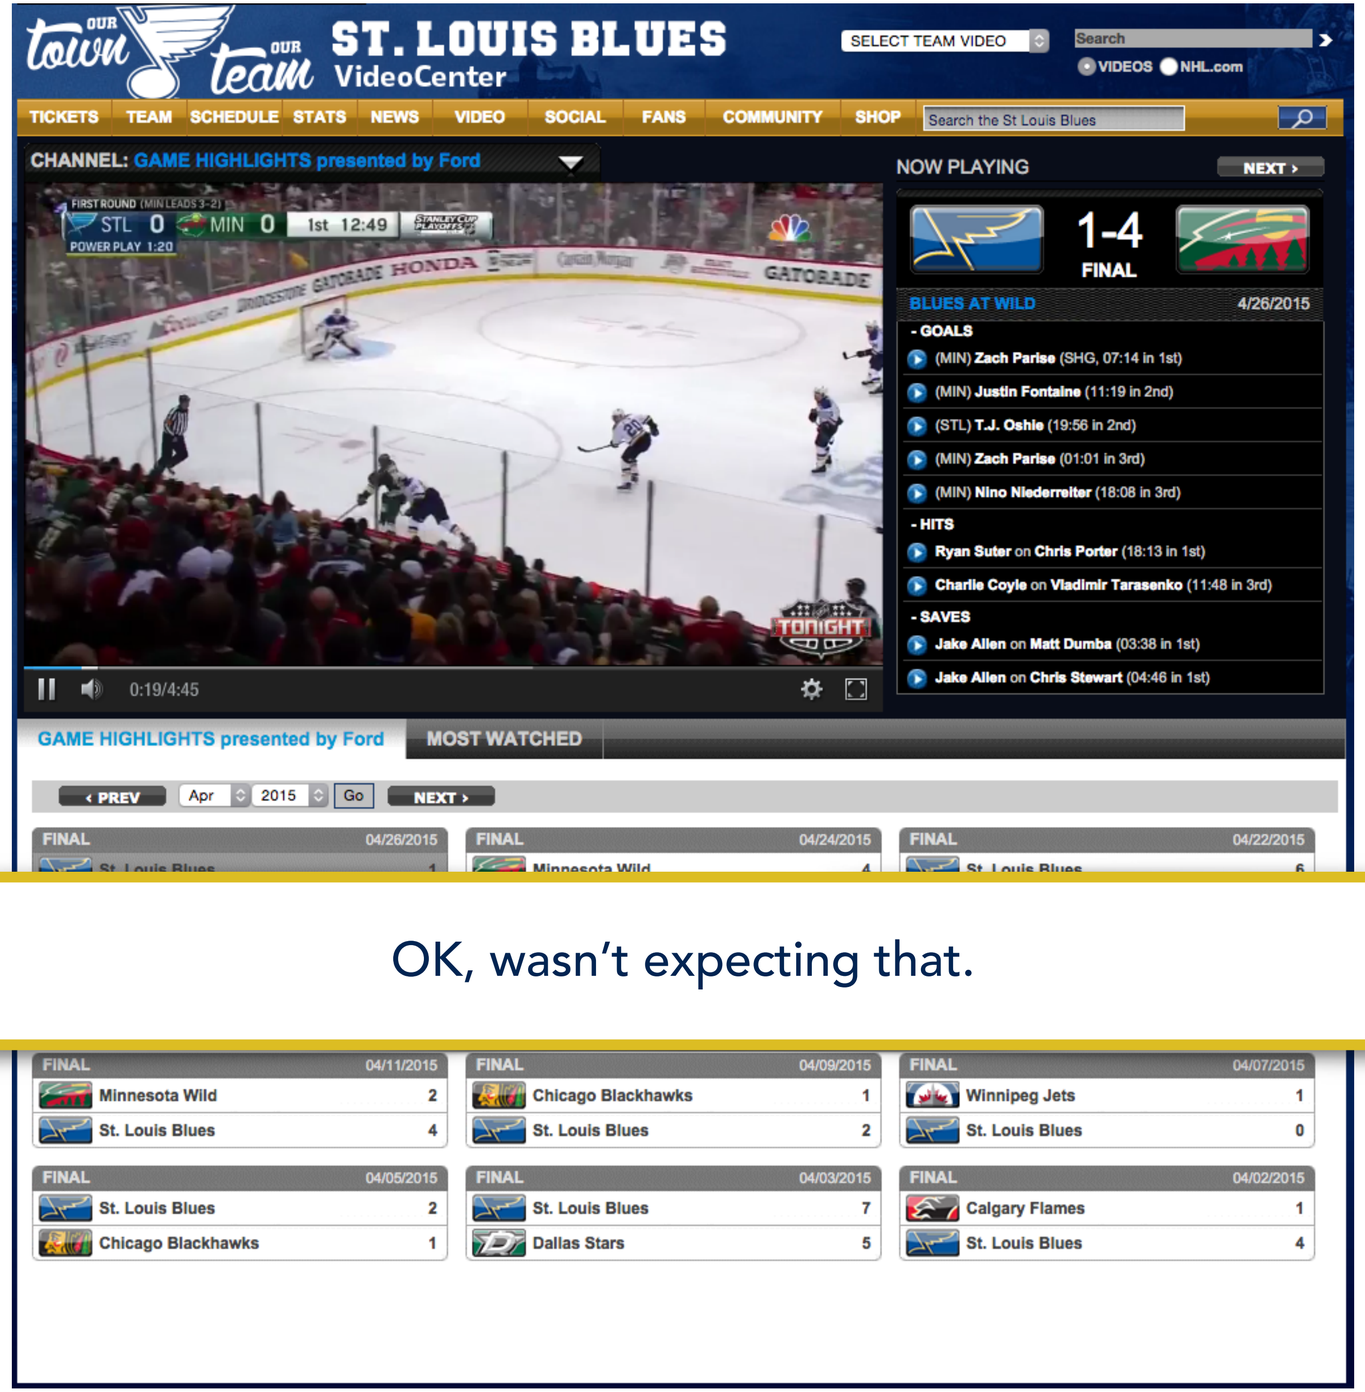
Let's take a look at the Video category!

There are three main categories.

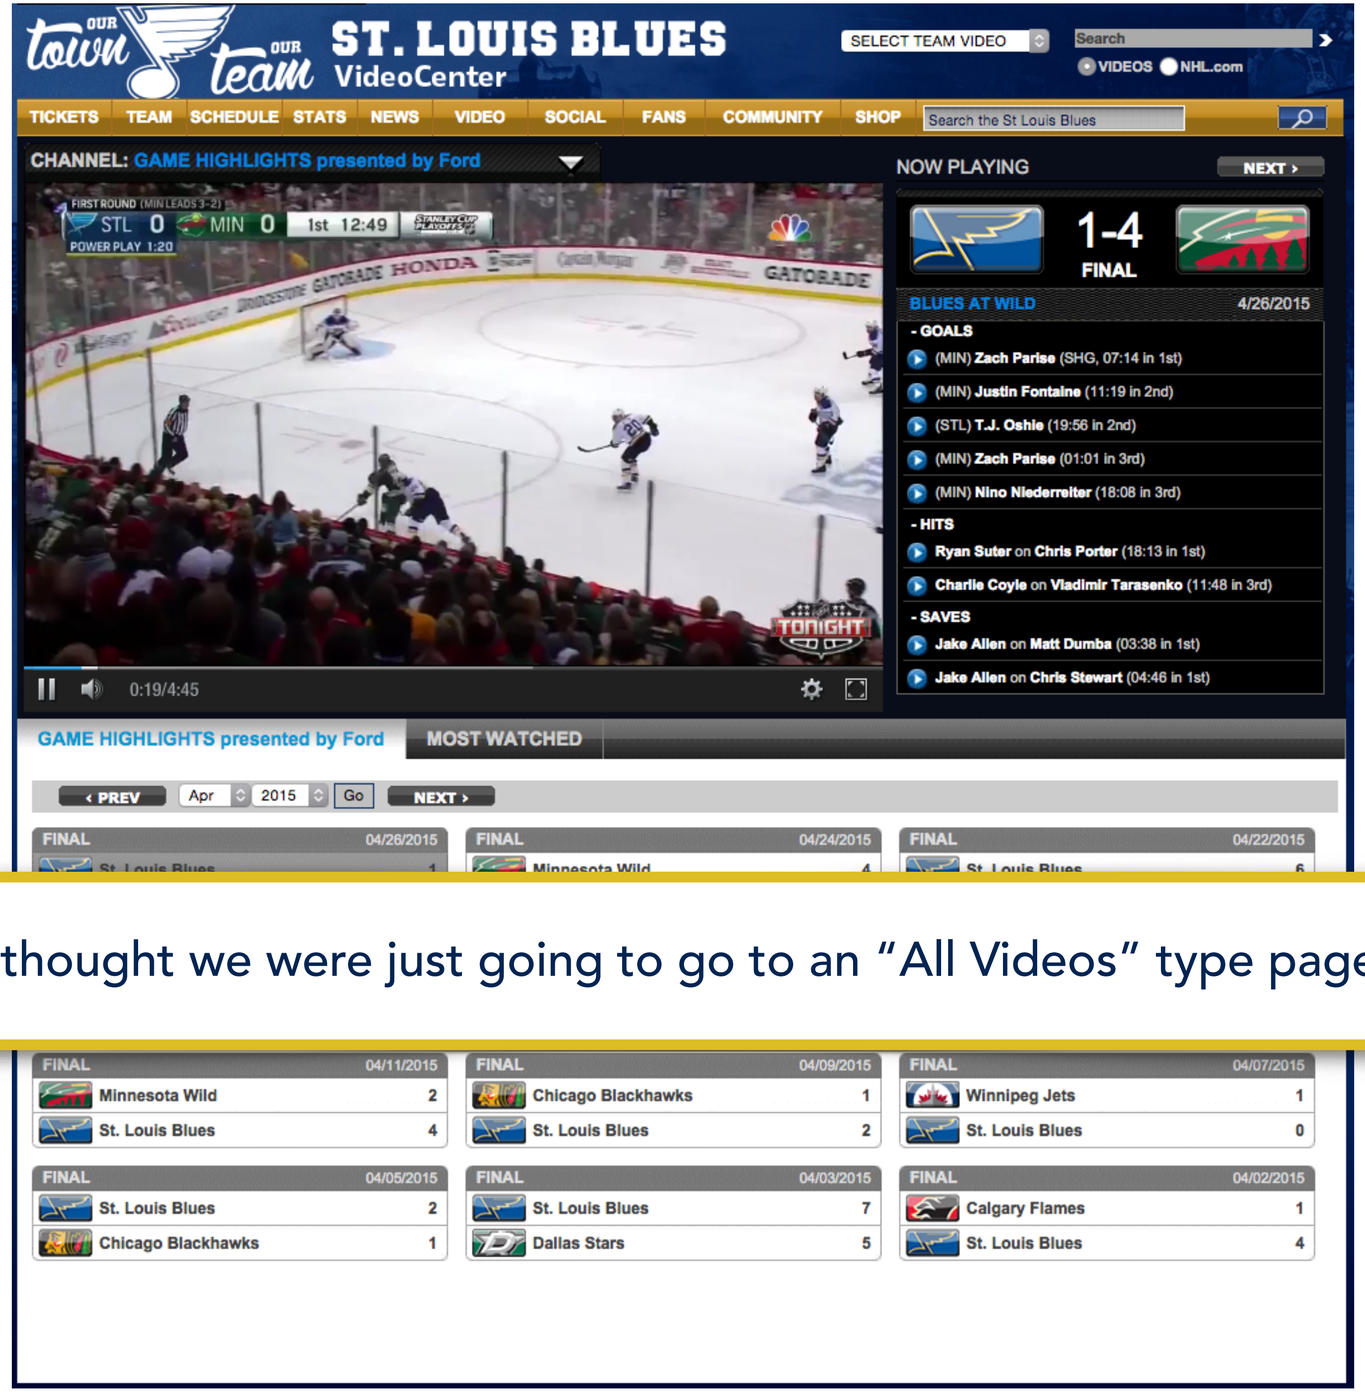
There are three main categories.

And 13 “Video Channel” subcategories.

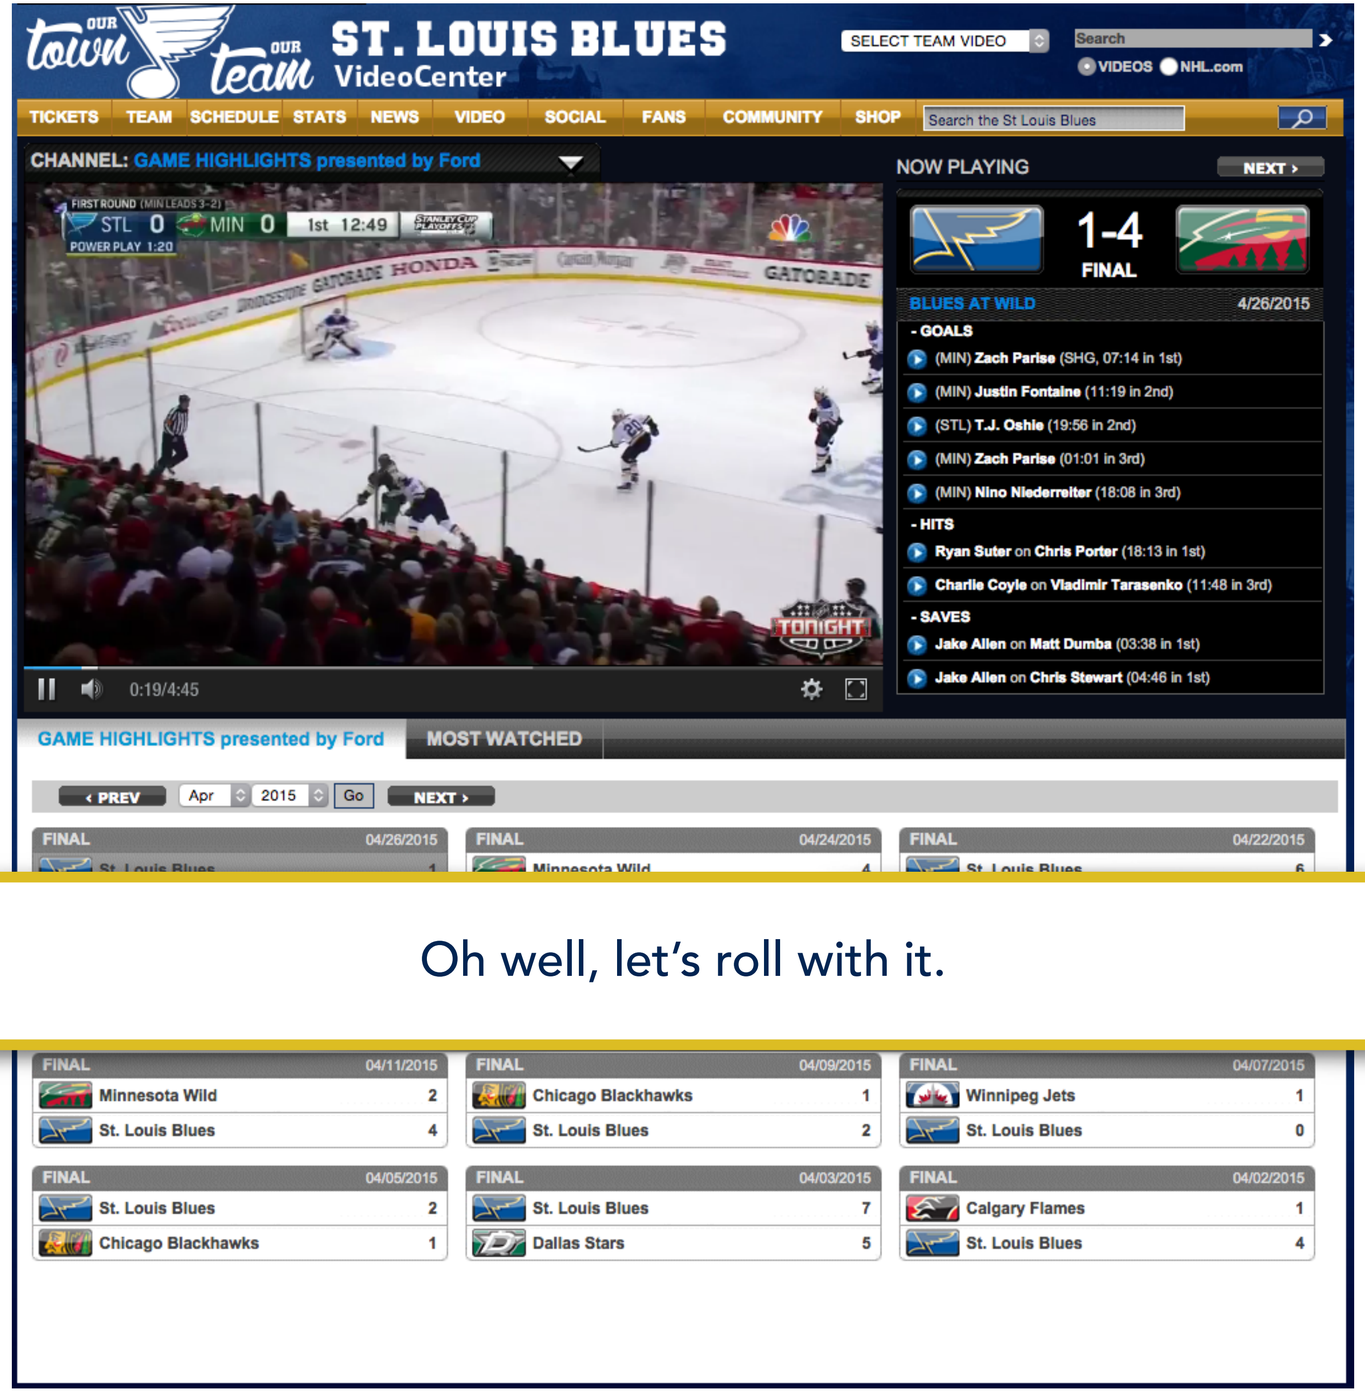
Let's click on "Video"!



OK, wasn't expecting that.



I thought we were just going to go to an “All Videos” type page.



Oh well, let's roll with it.

It looks like this is a “Game Highlights” page.

Here are some plays from the “Blues at Wild” game.

Does that mean this was the last game they played?

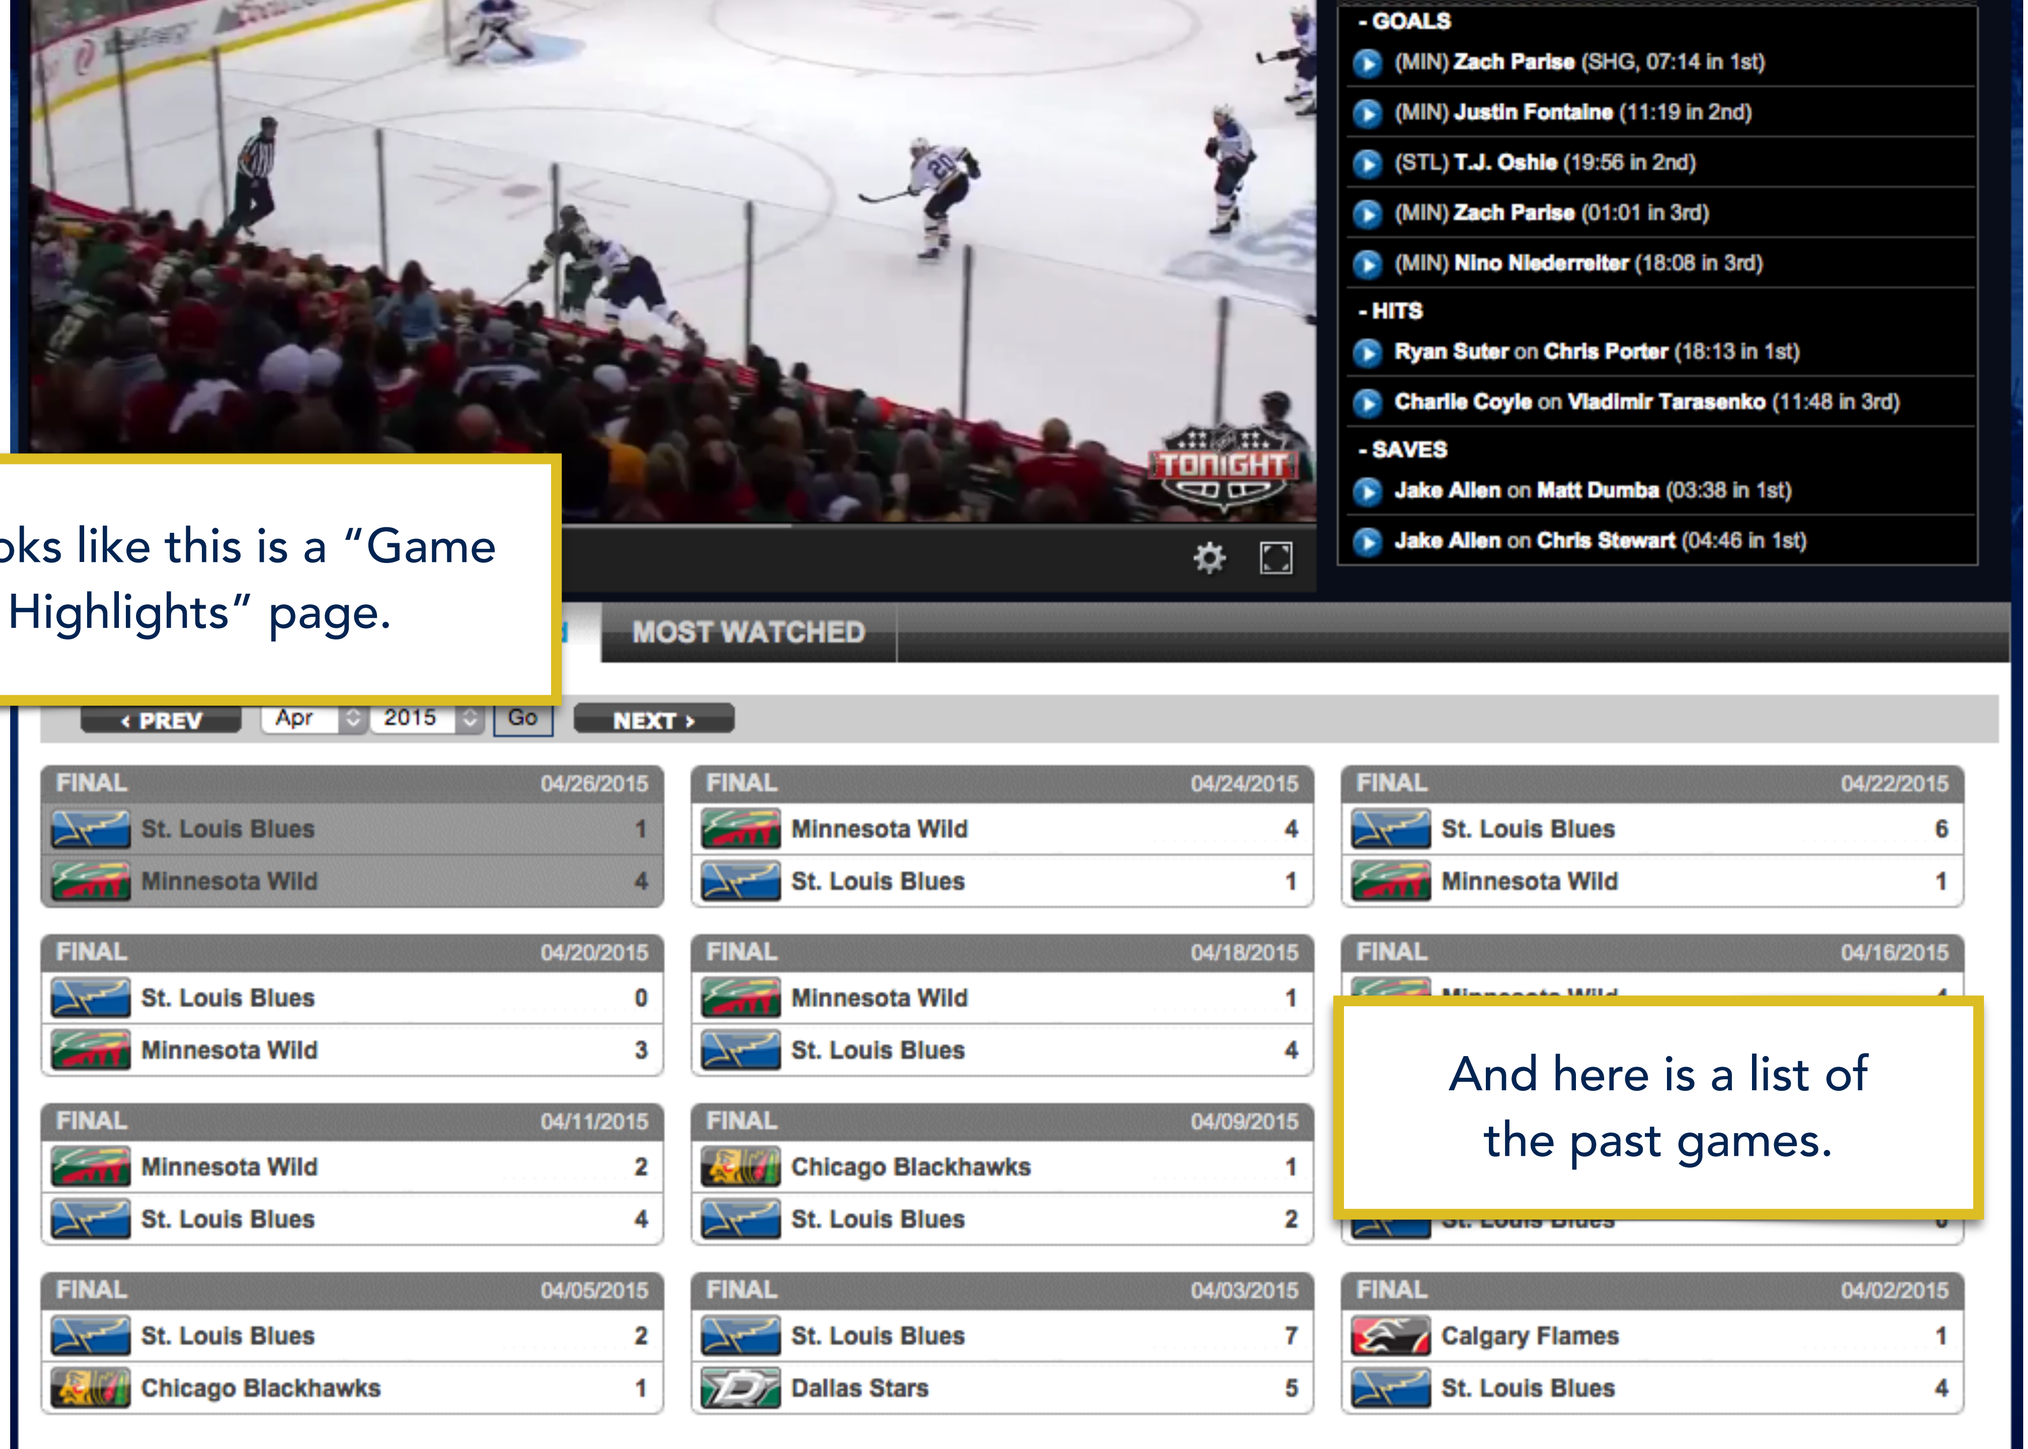
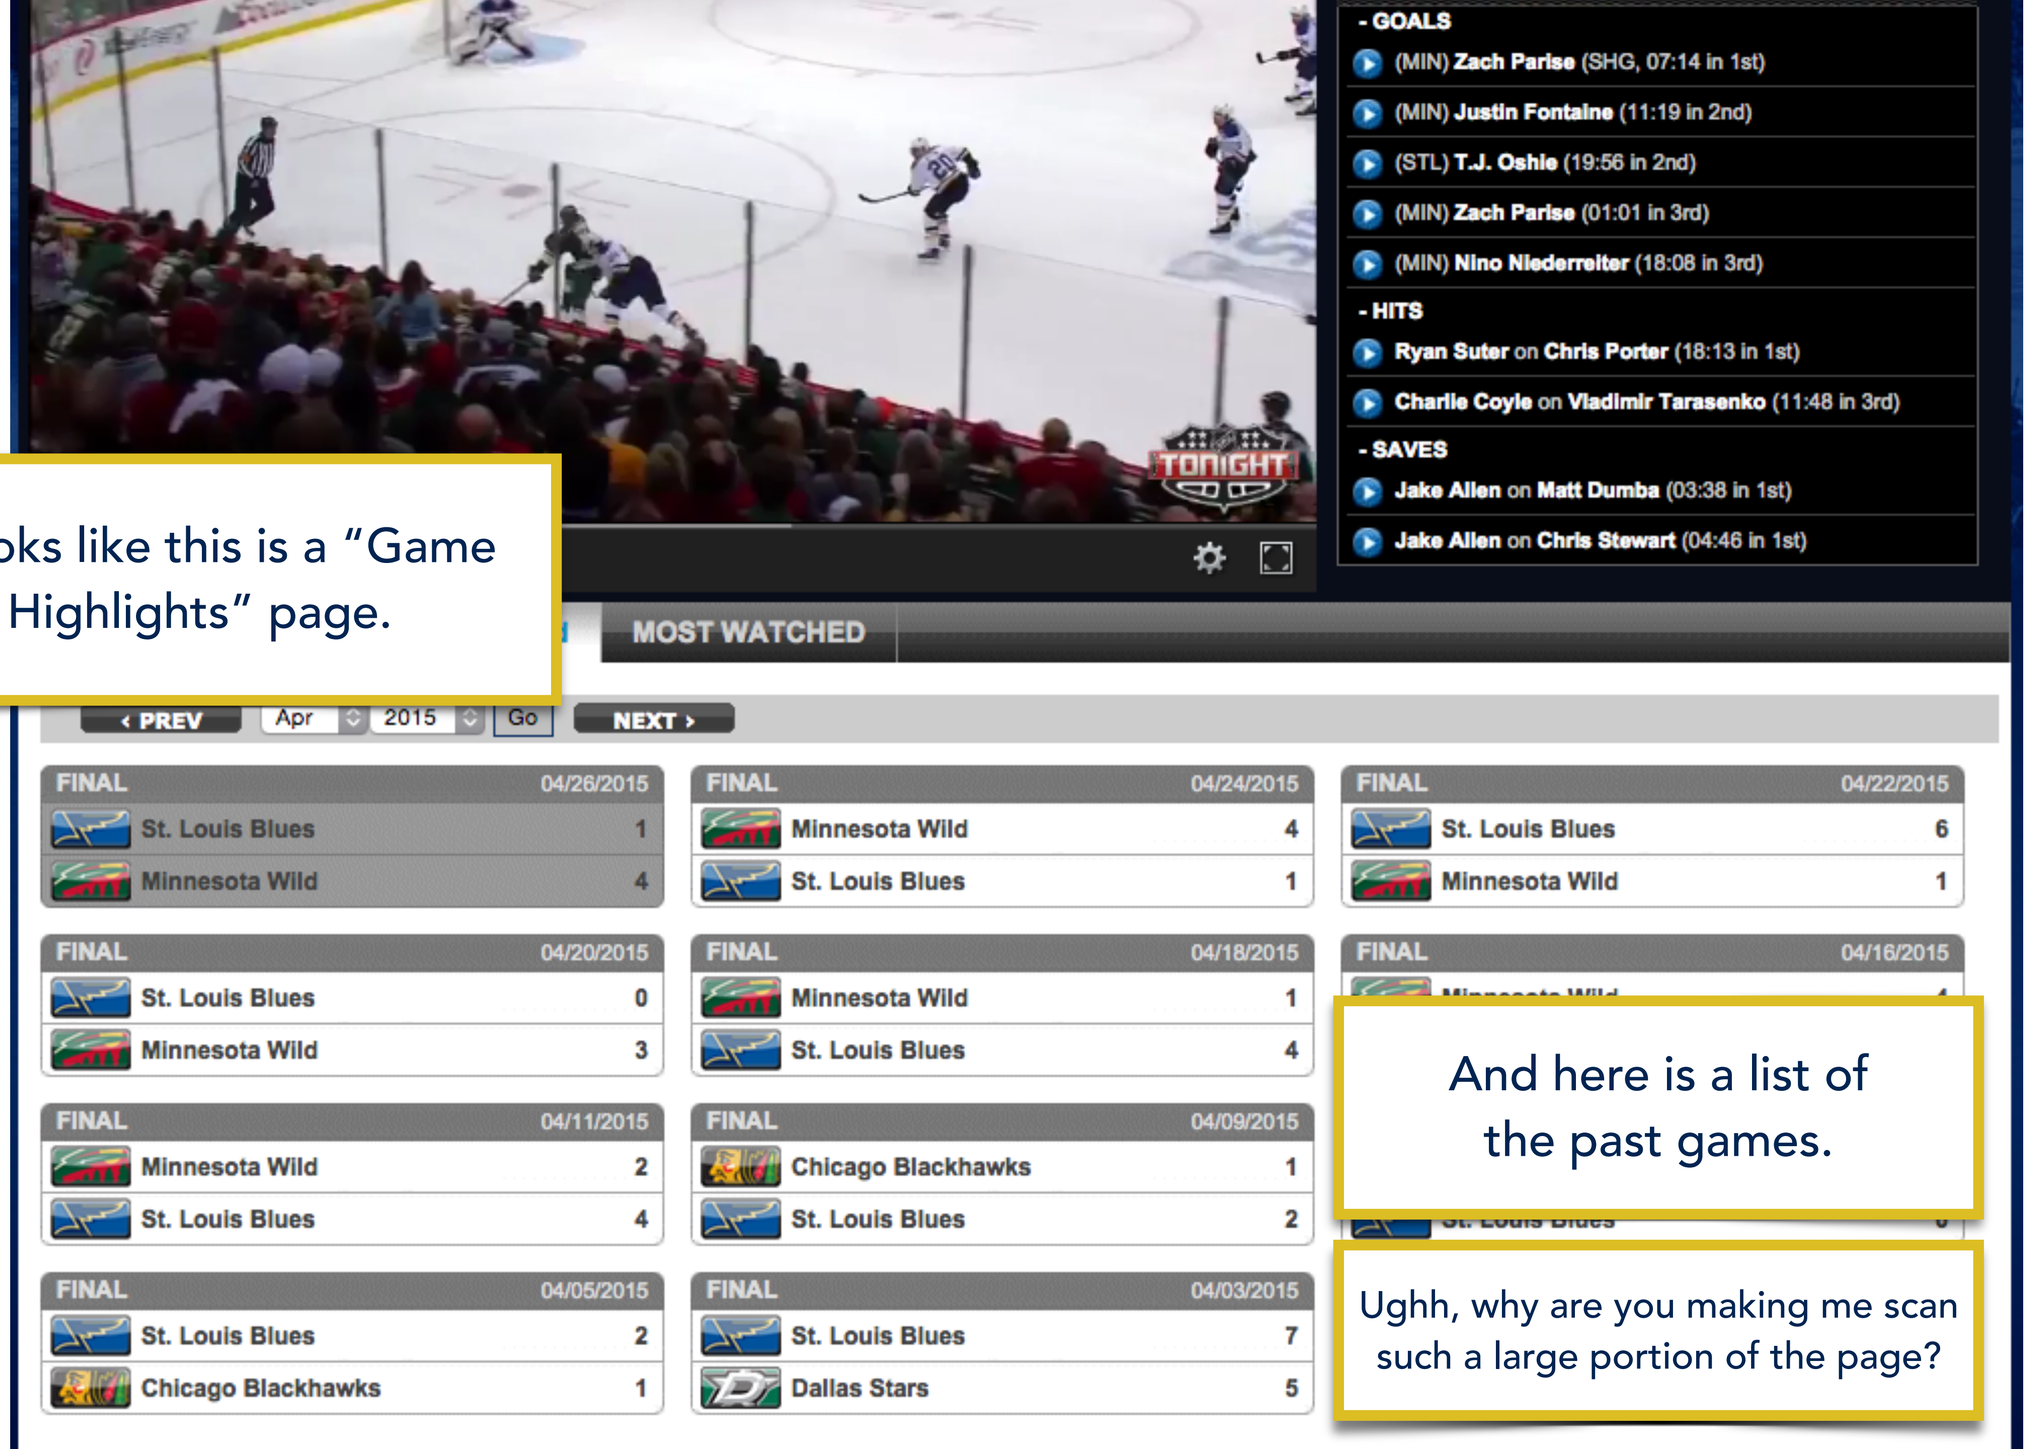
Can I sort the plays by period instead of just goals, hits and saves?



It looks like this is a “Game Highlights” page.

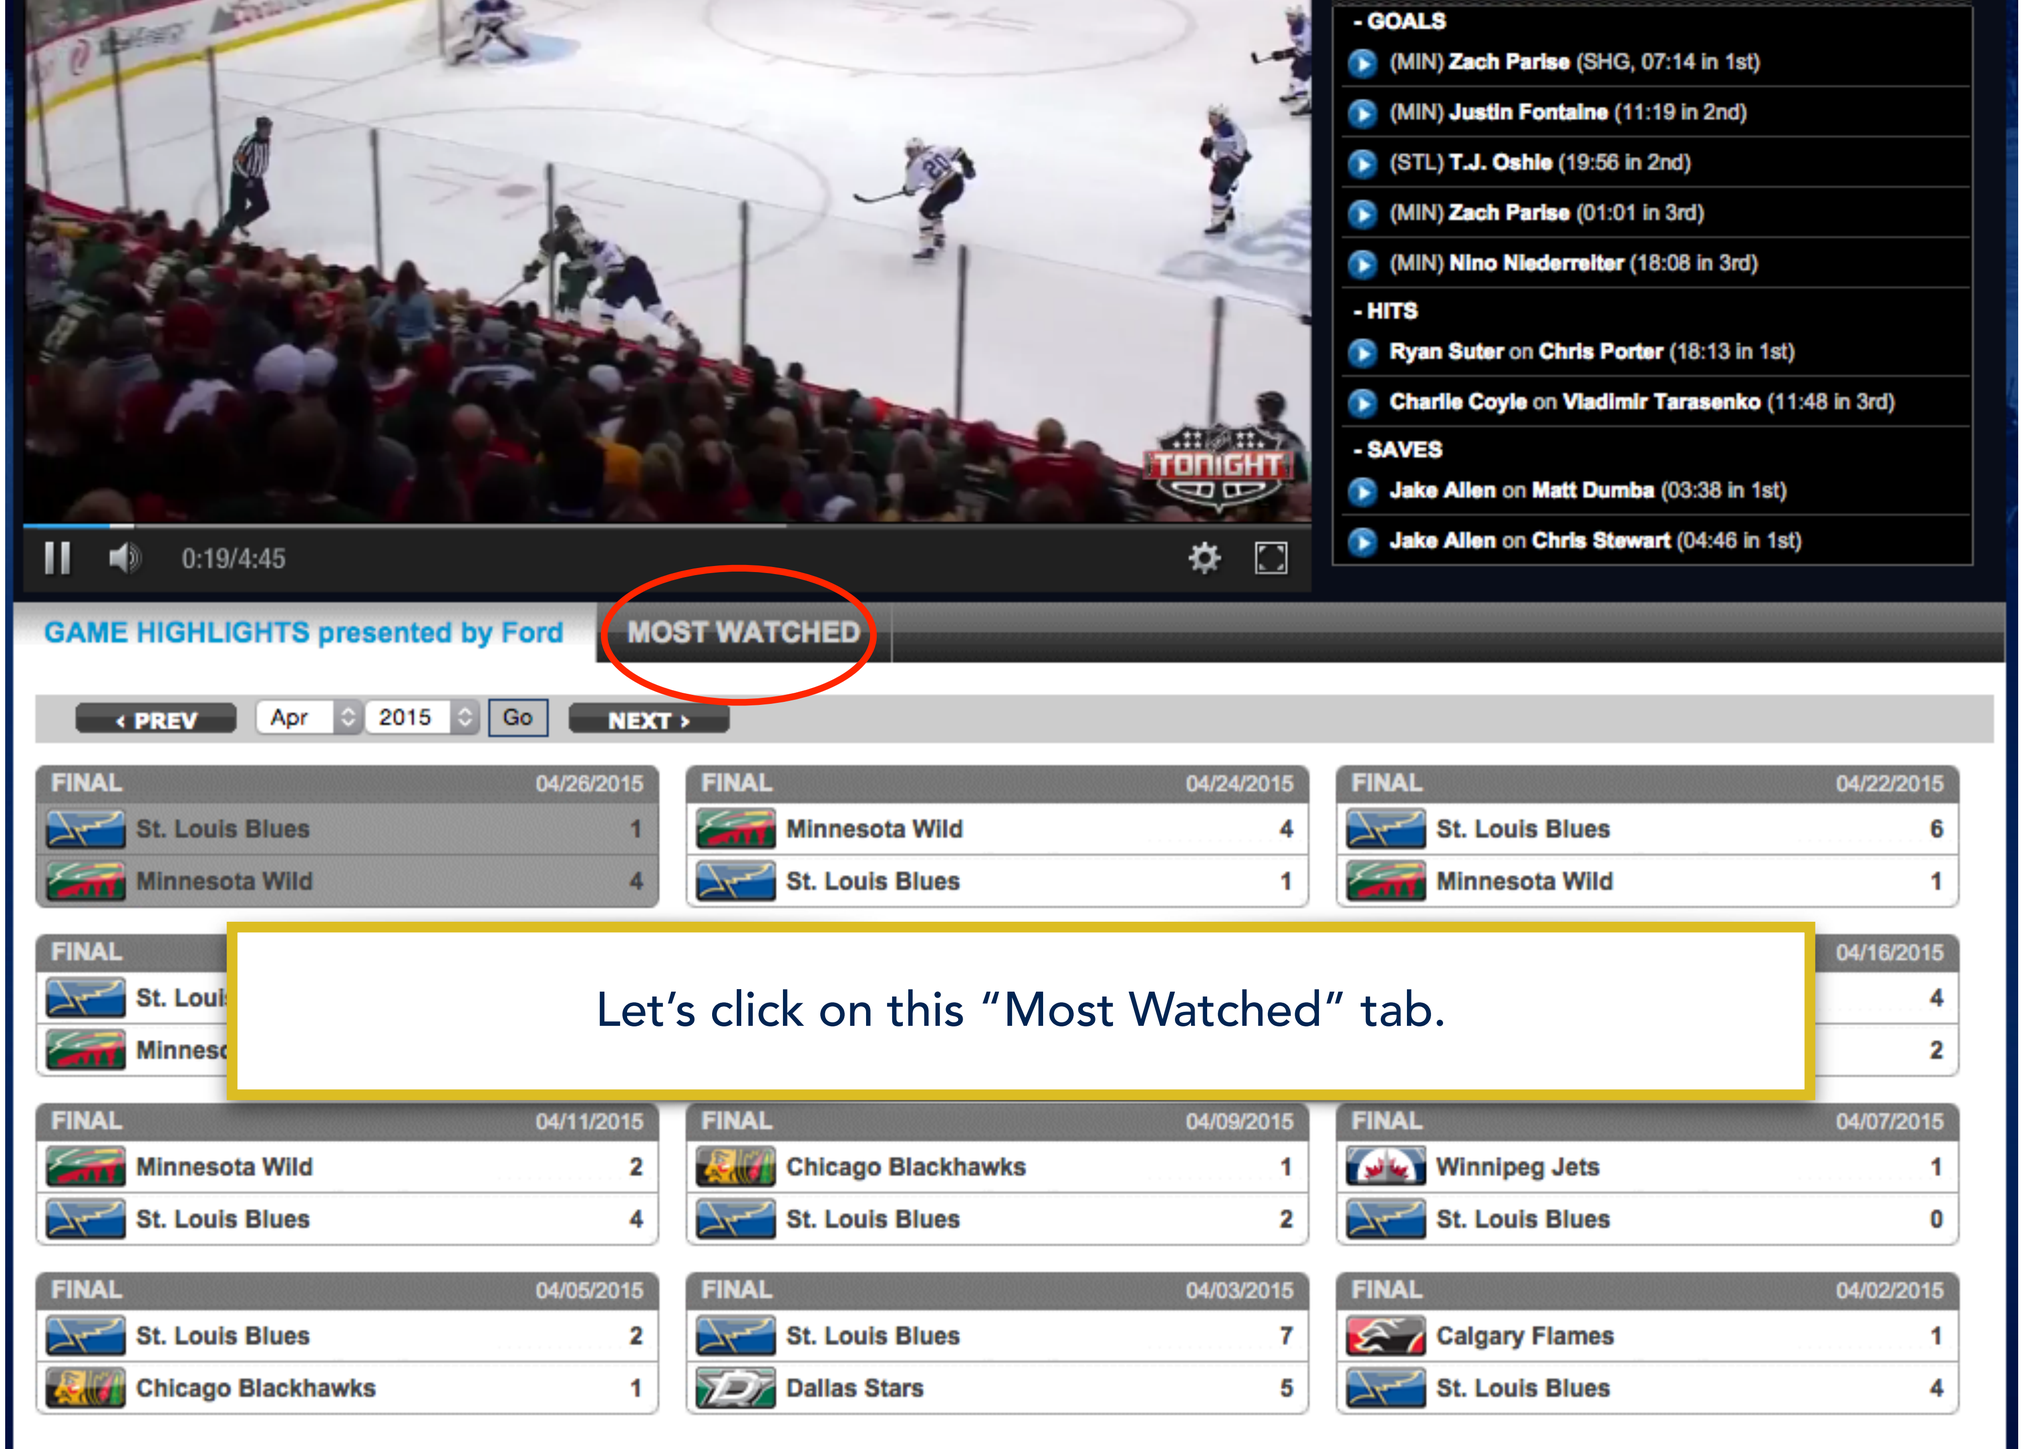
And here is a list of the past games.



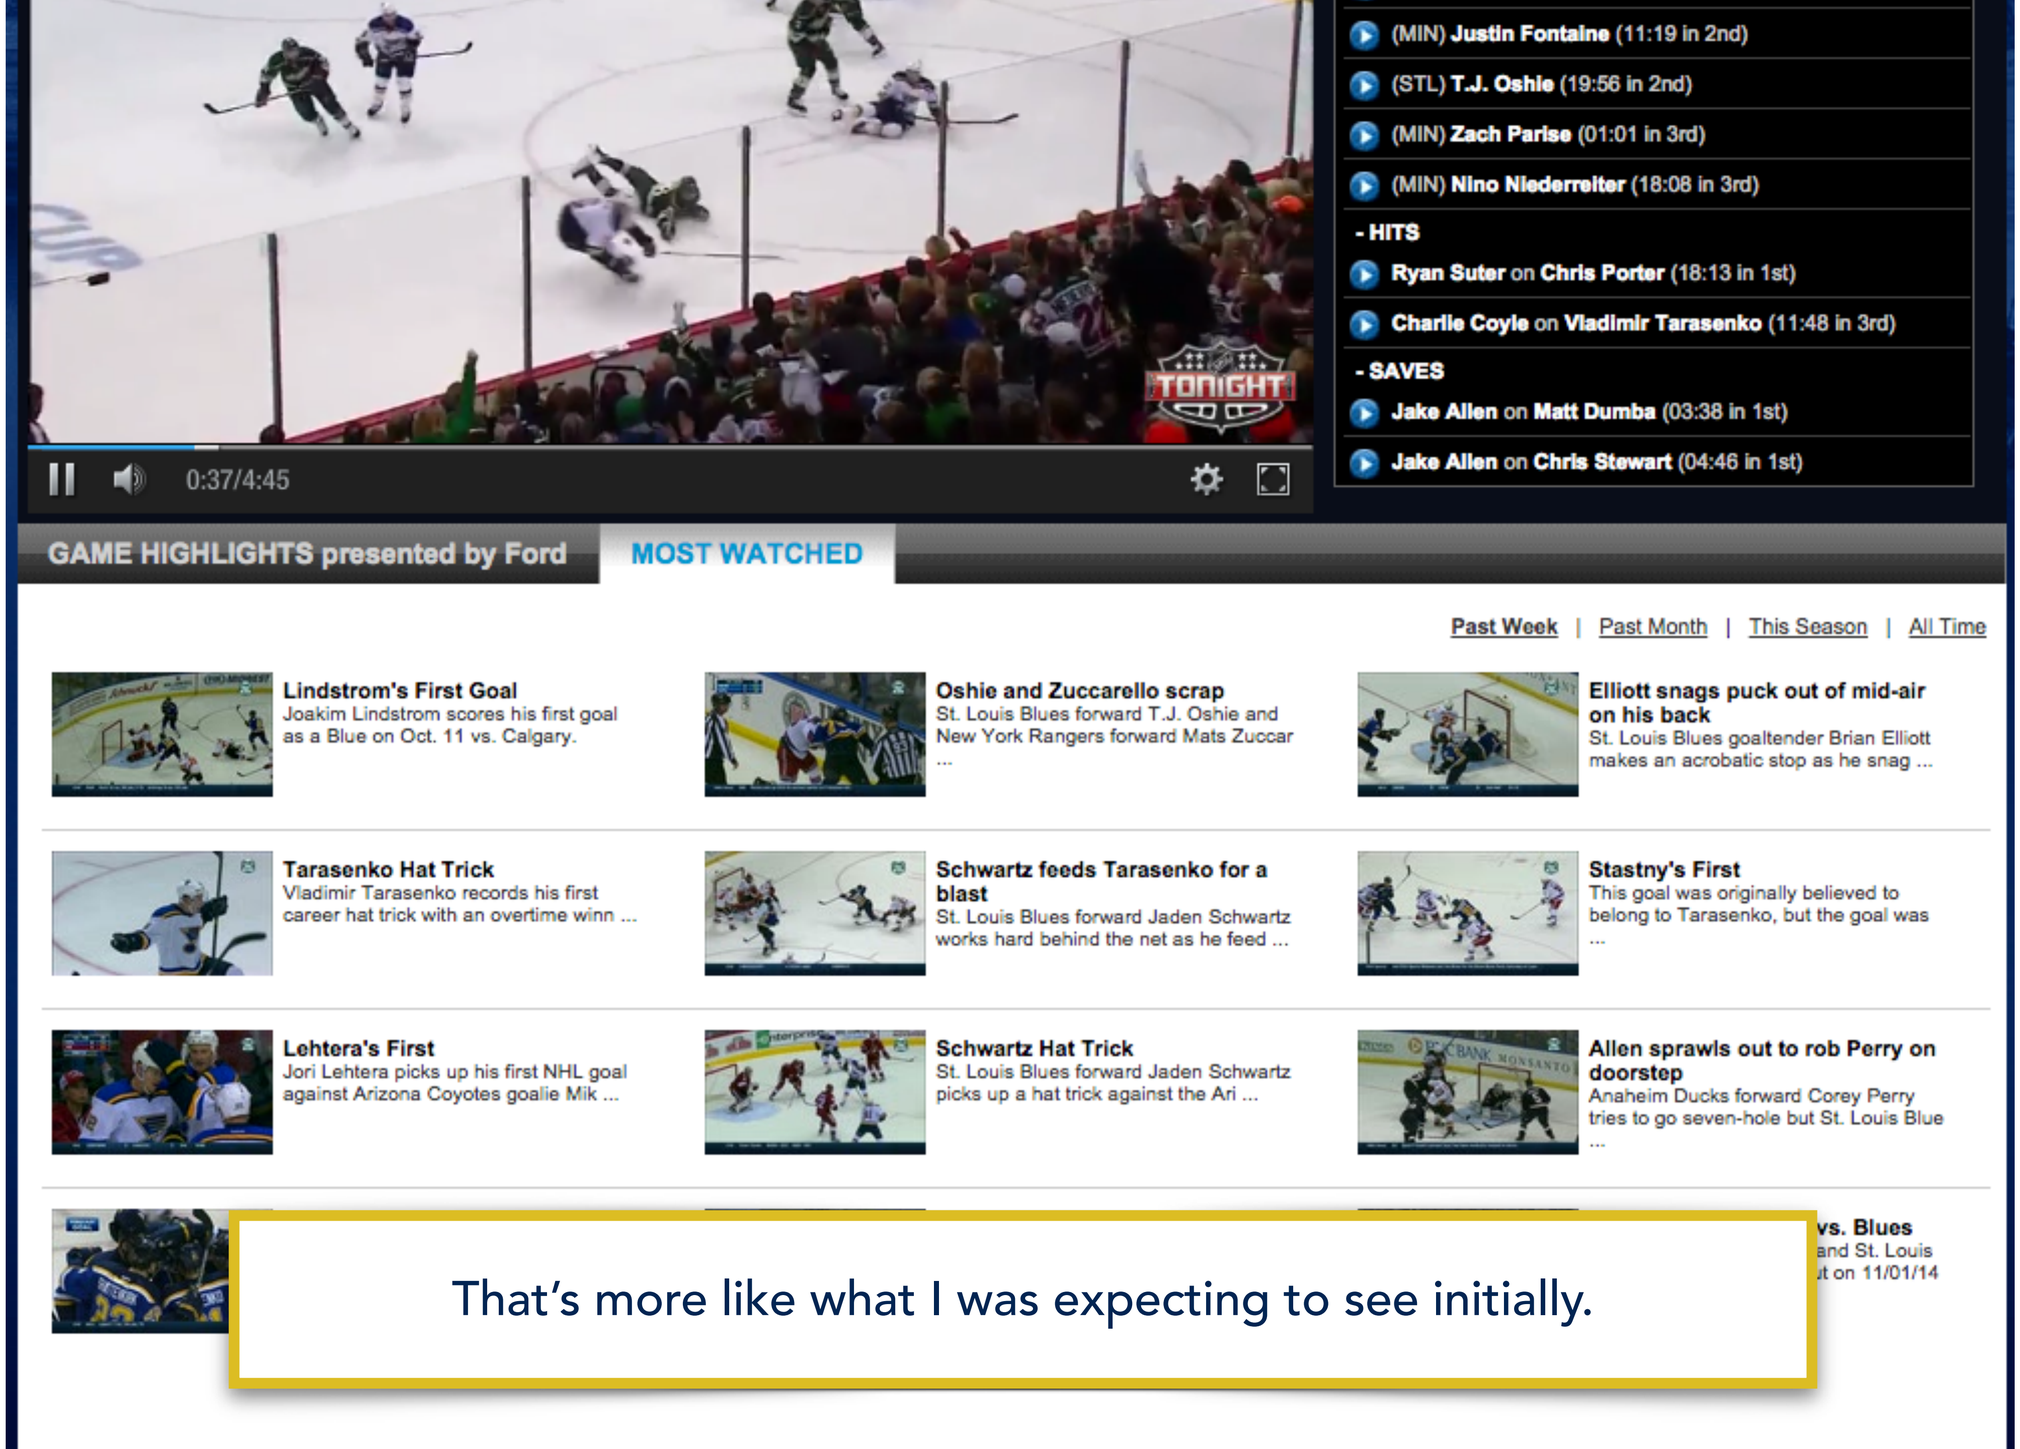
It looks like this is a “Game Highlights” page.

And here is a list of the past games.

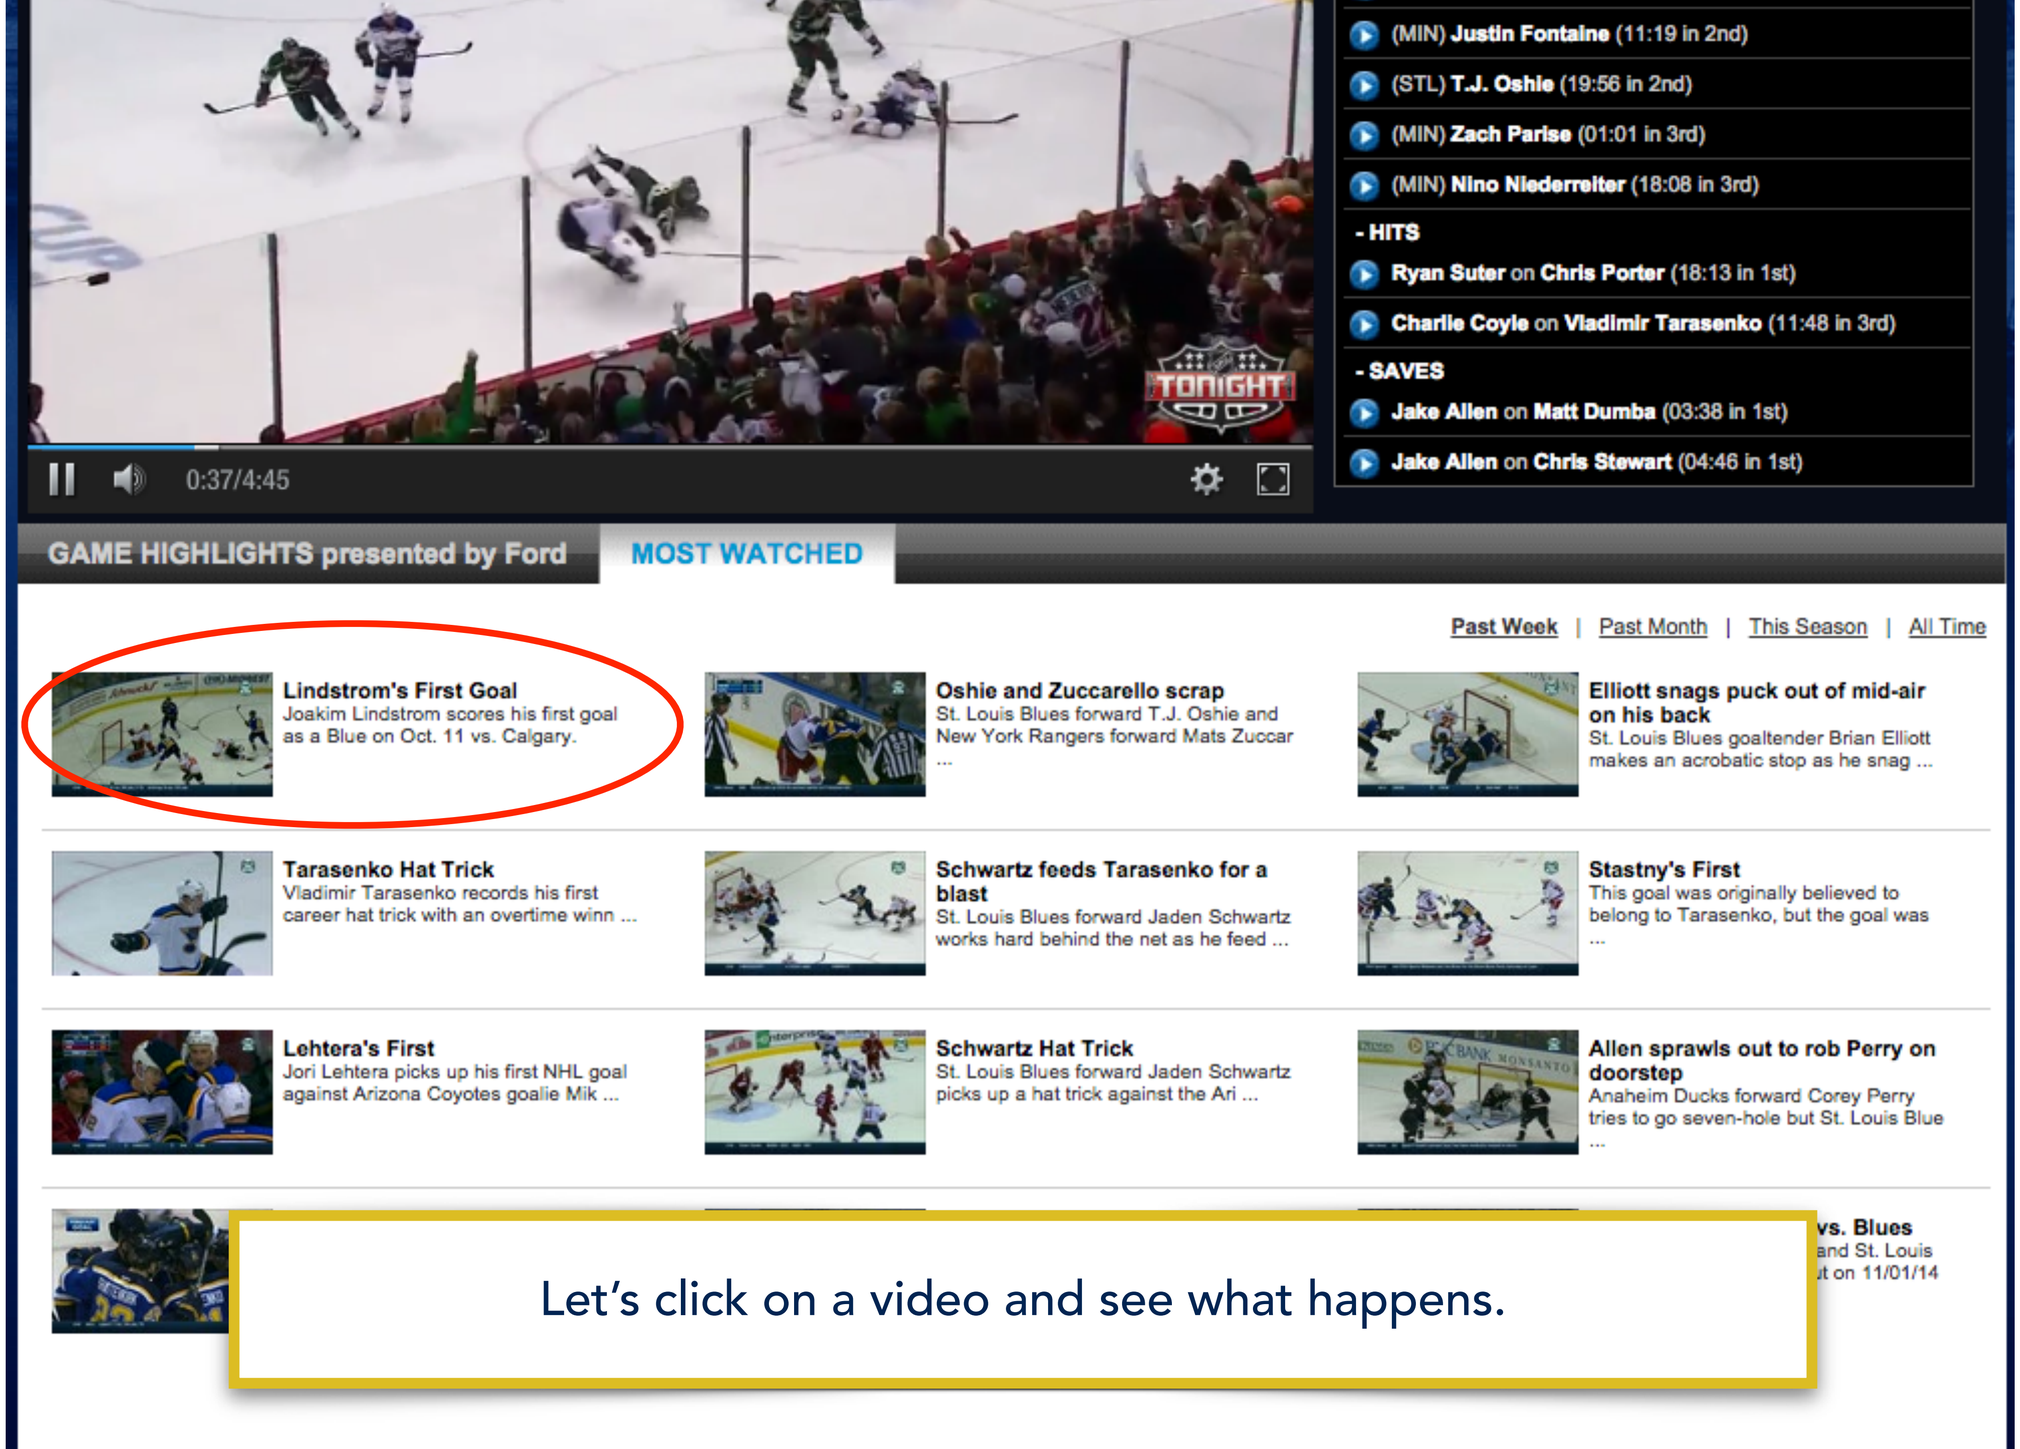
Ughh, why are you making me scan such a large portion of the page?



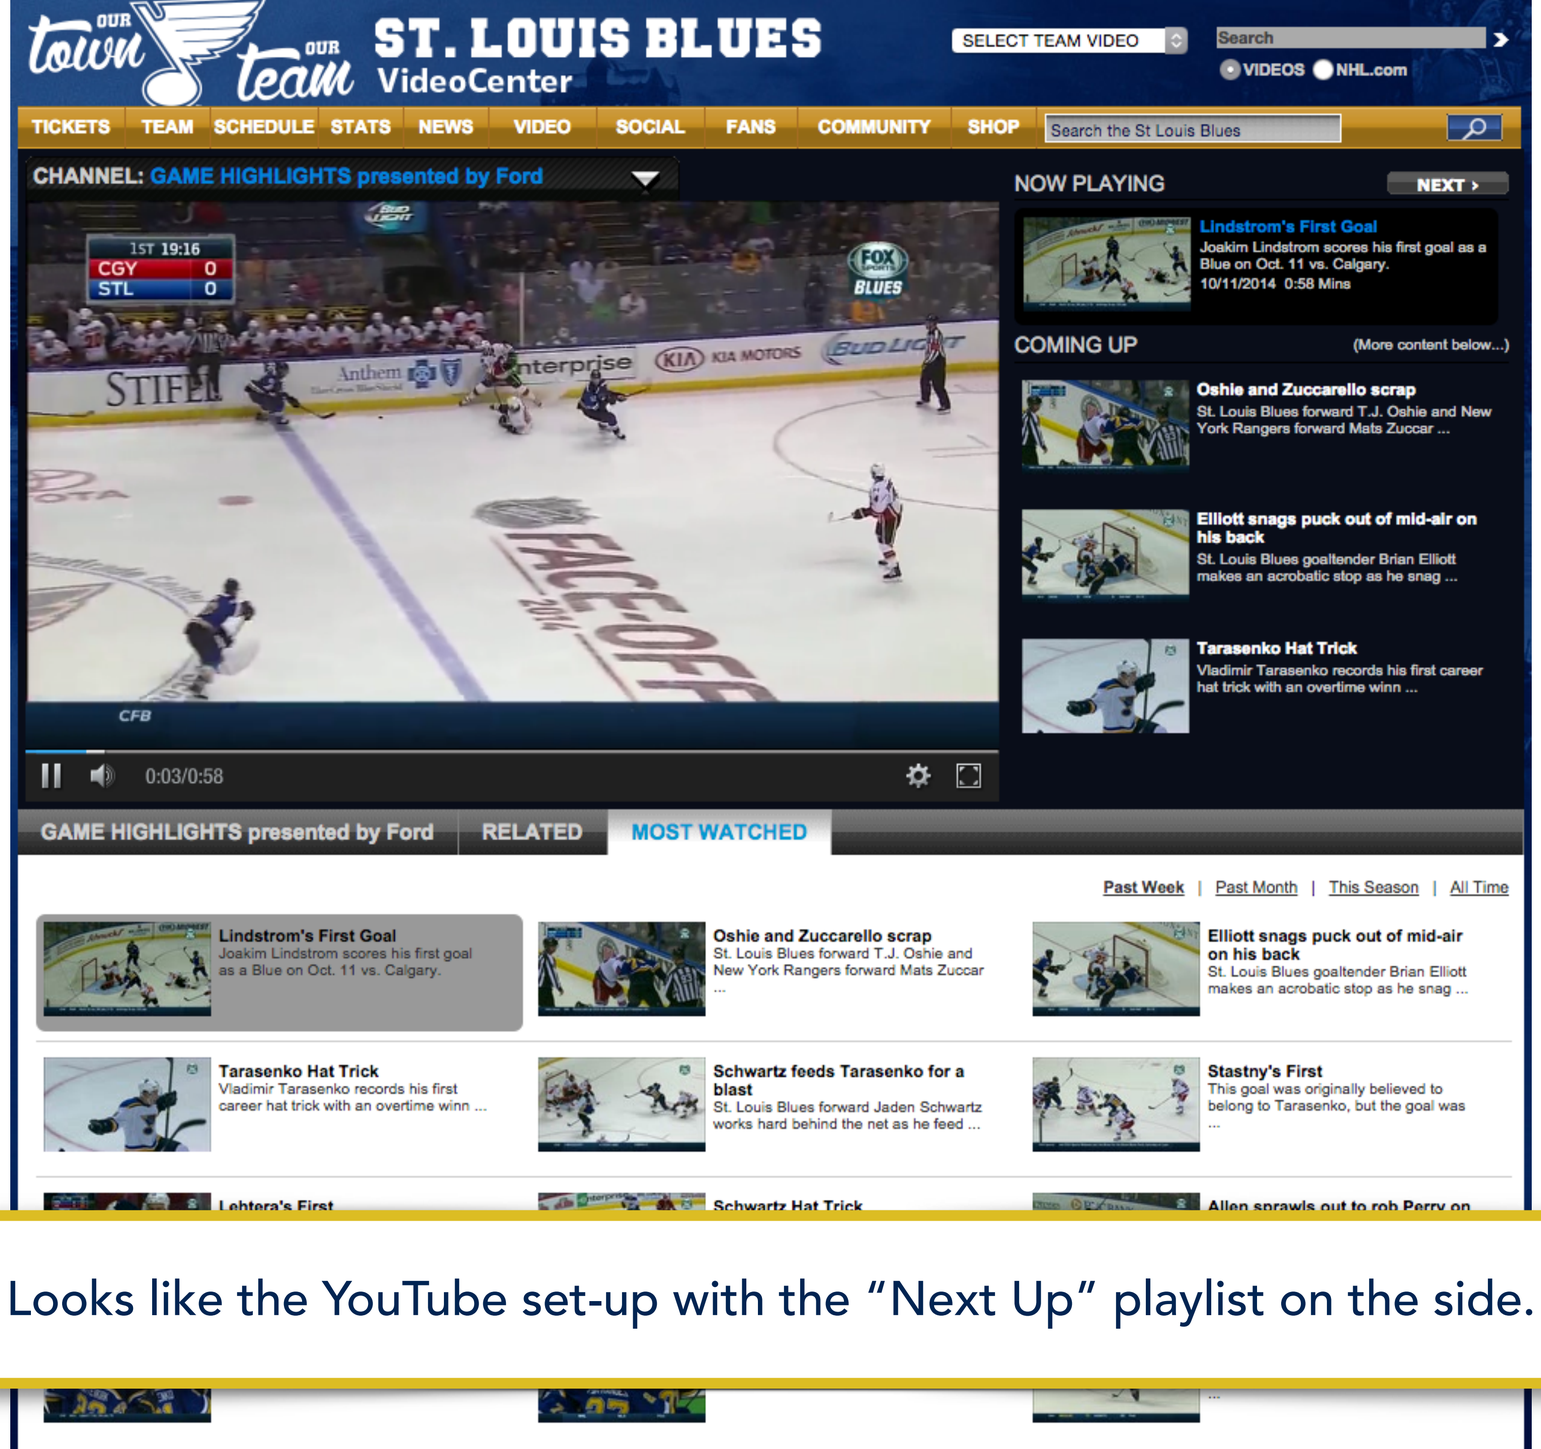
Let’s click on this “Most Watched” tab.



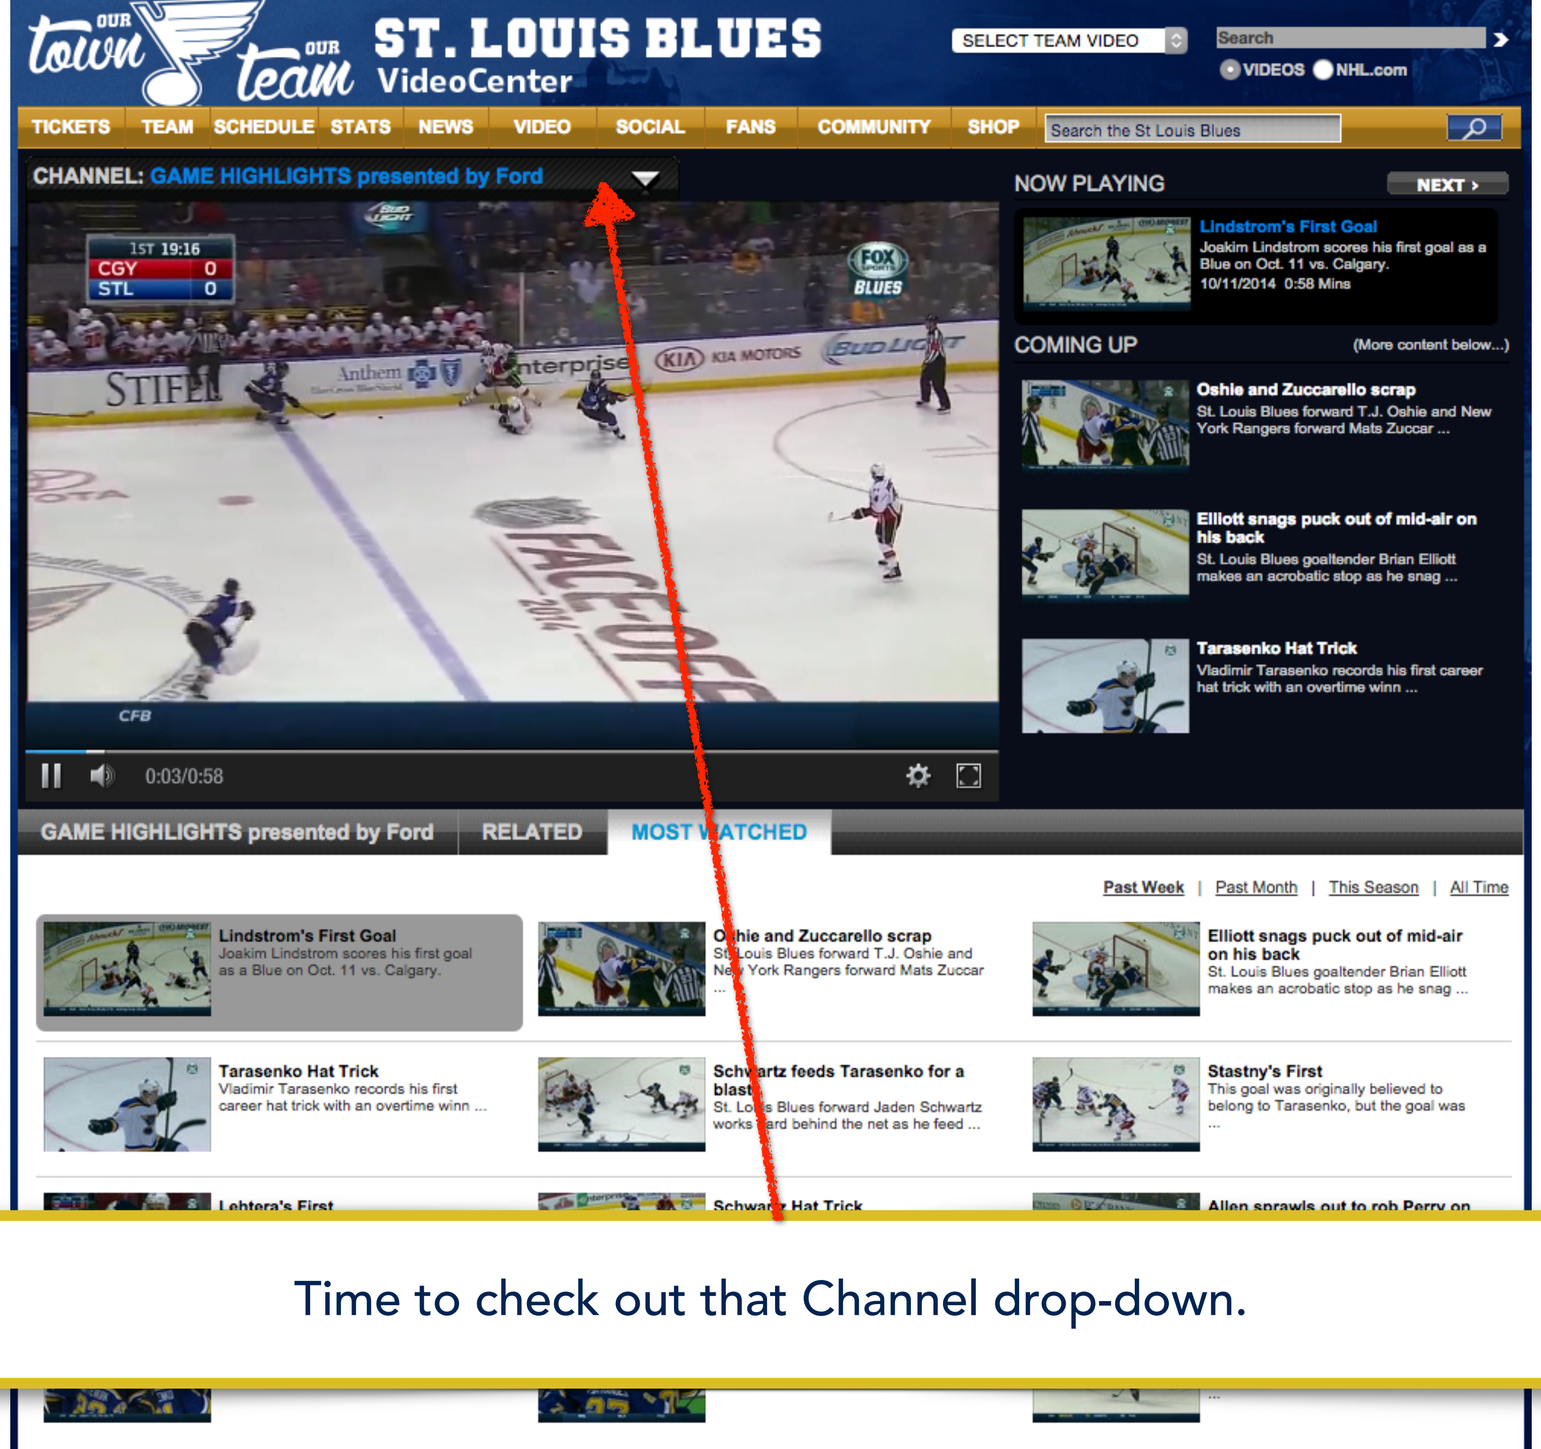
That's more like what I was expecting to see initially.



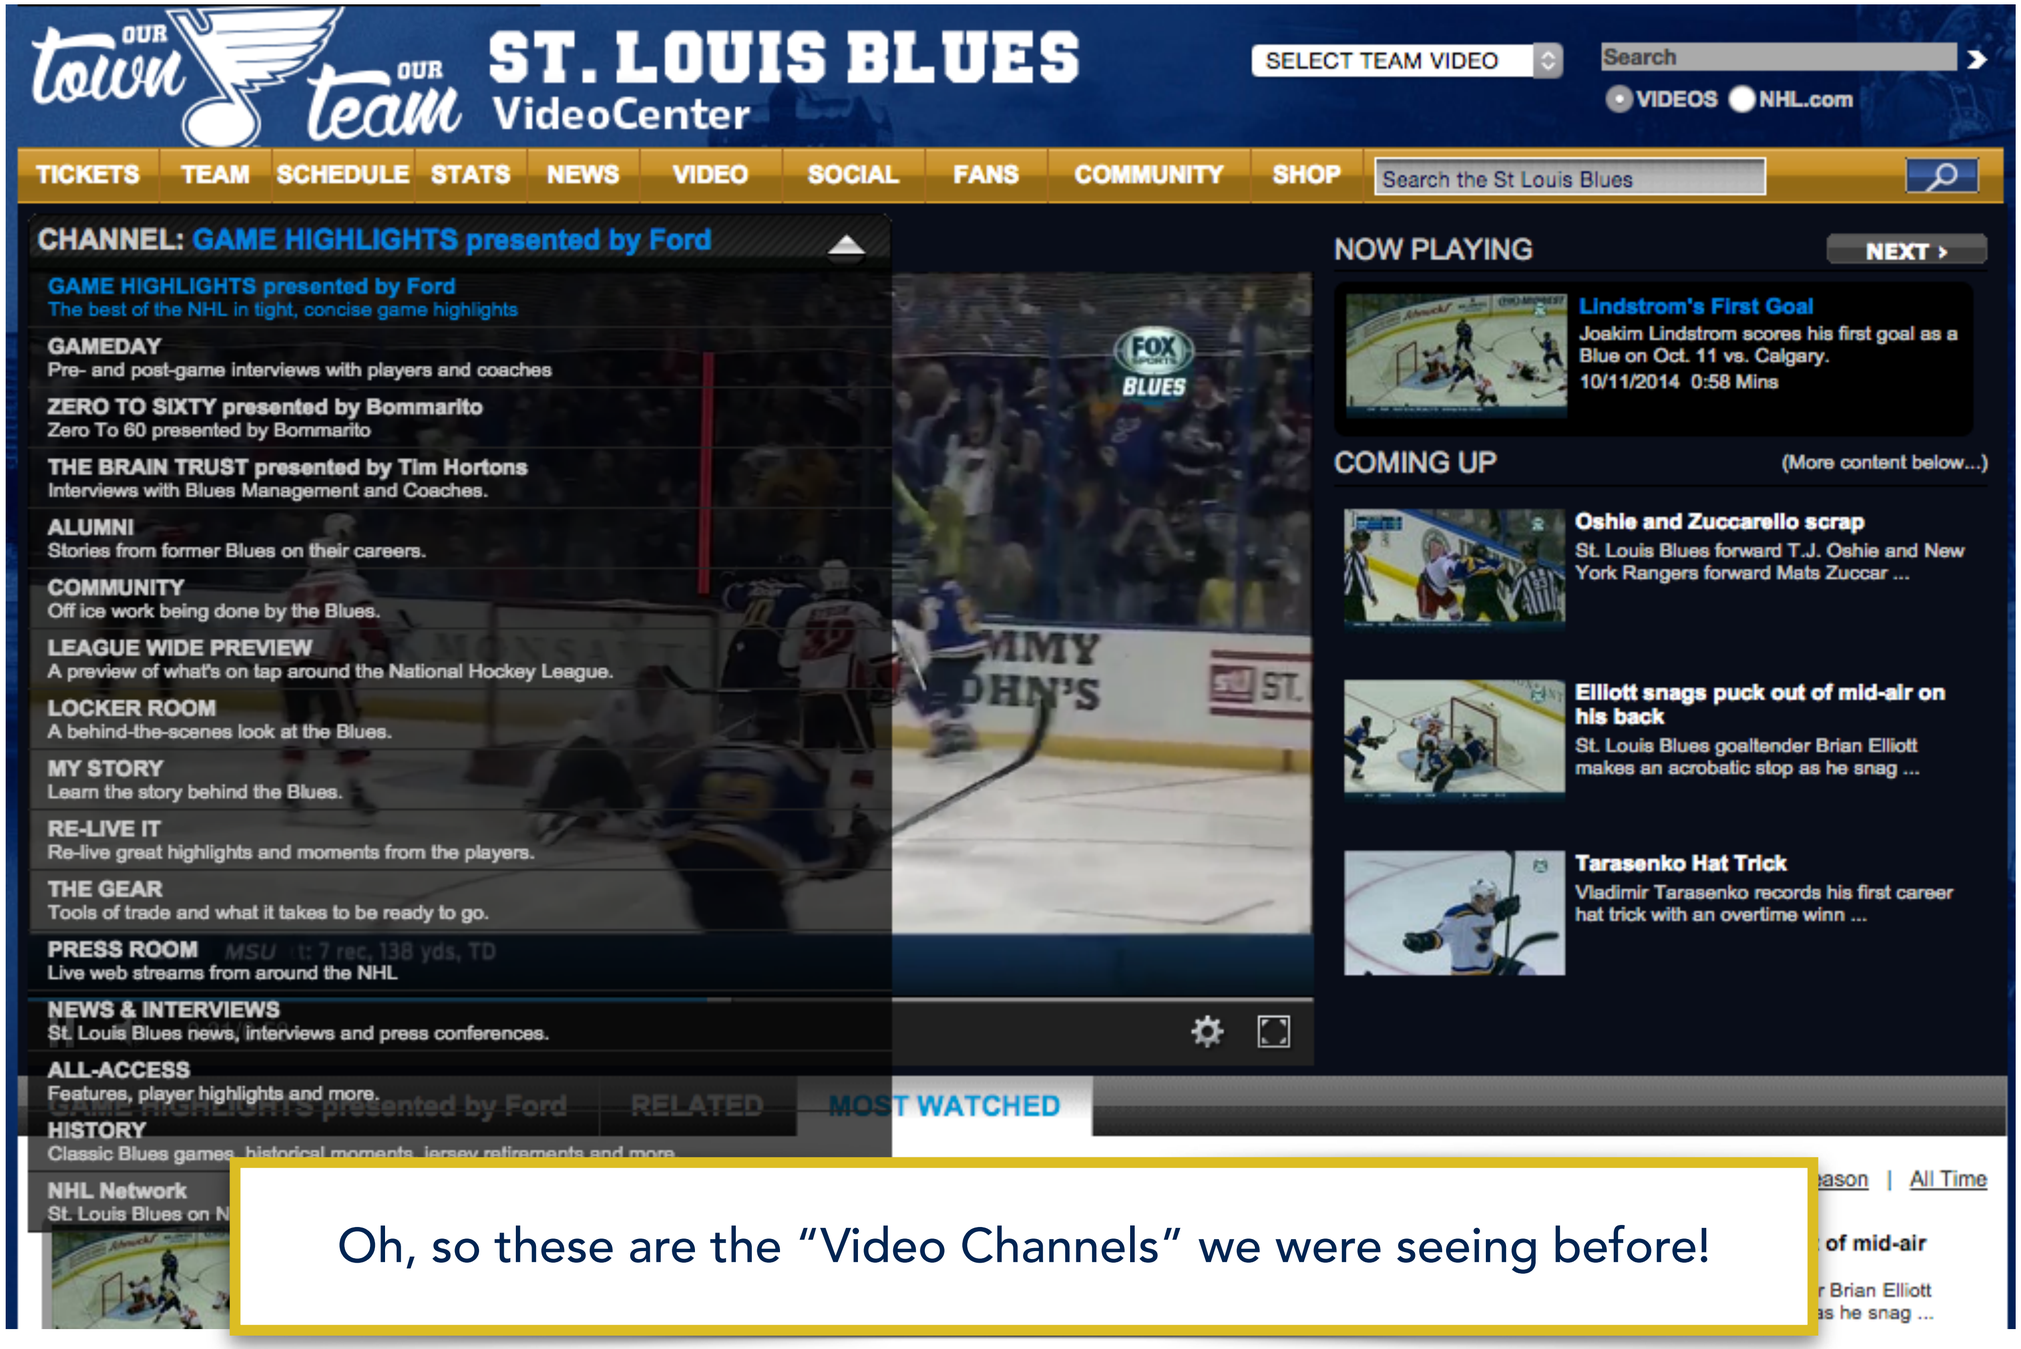
Let’s click on a video and see what happens.



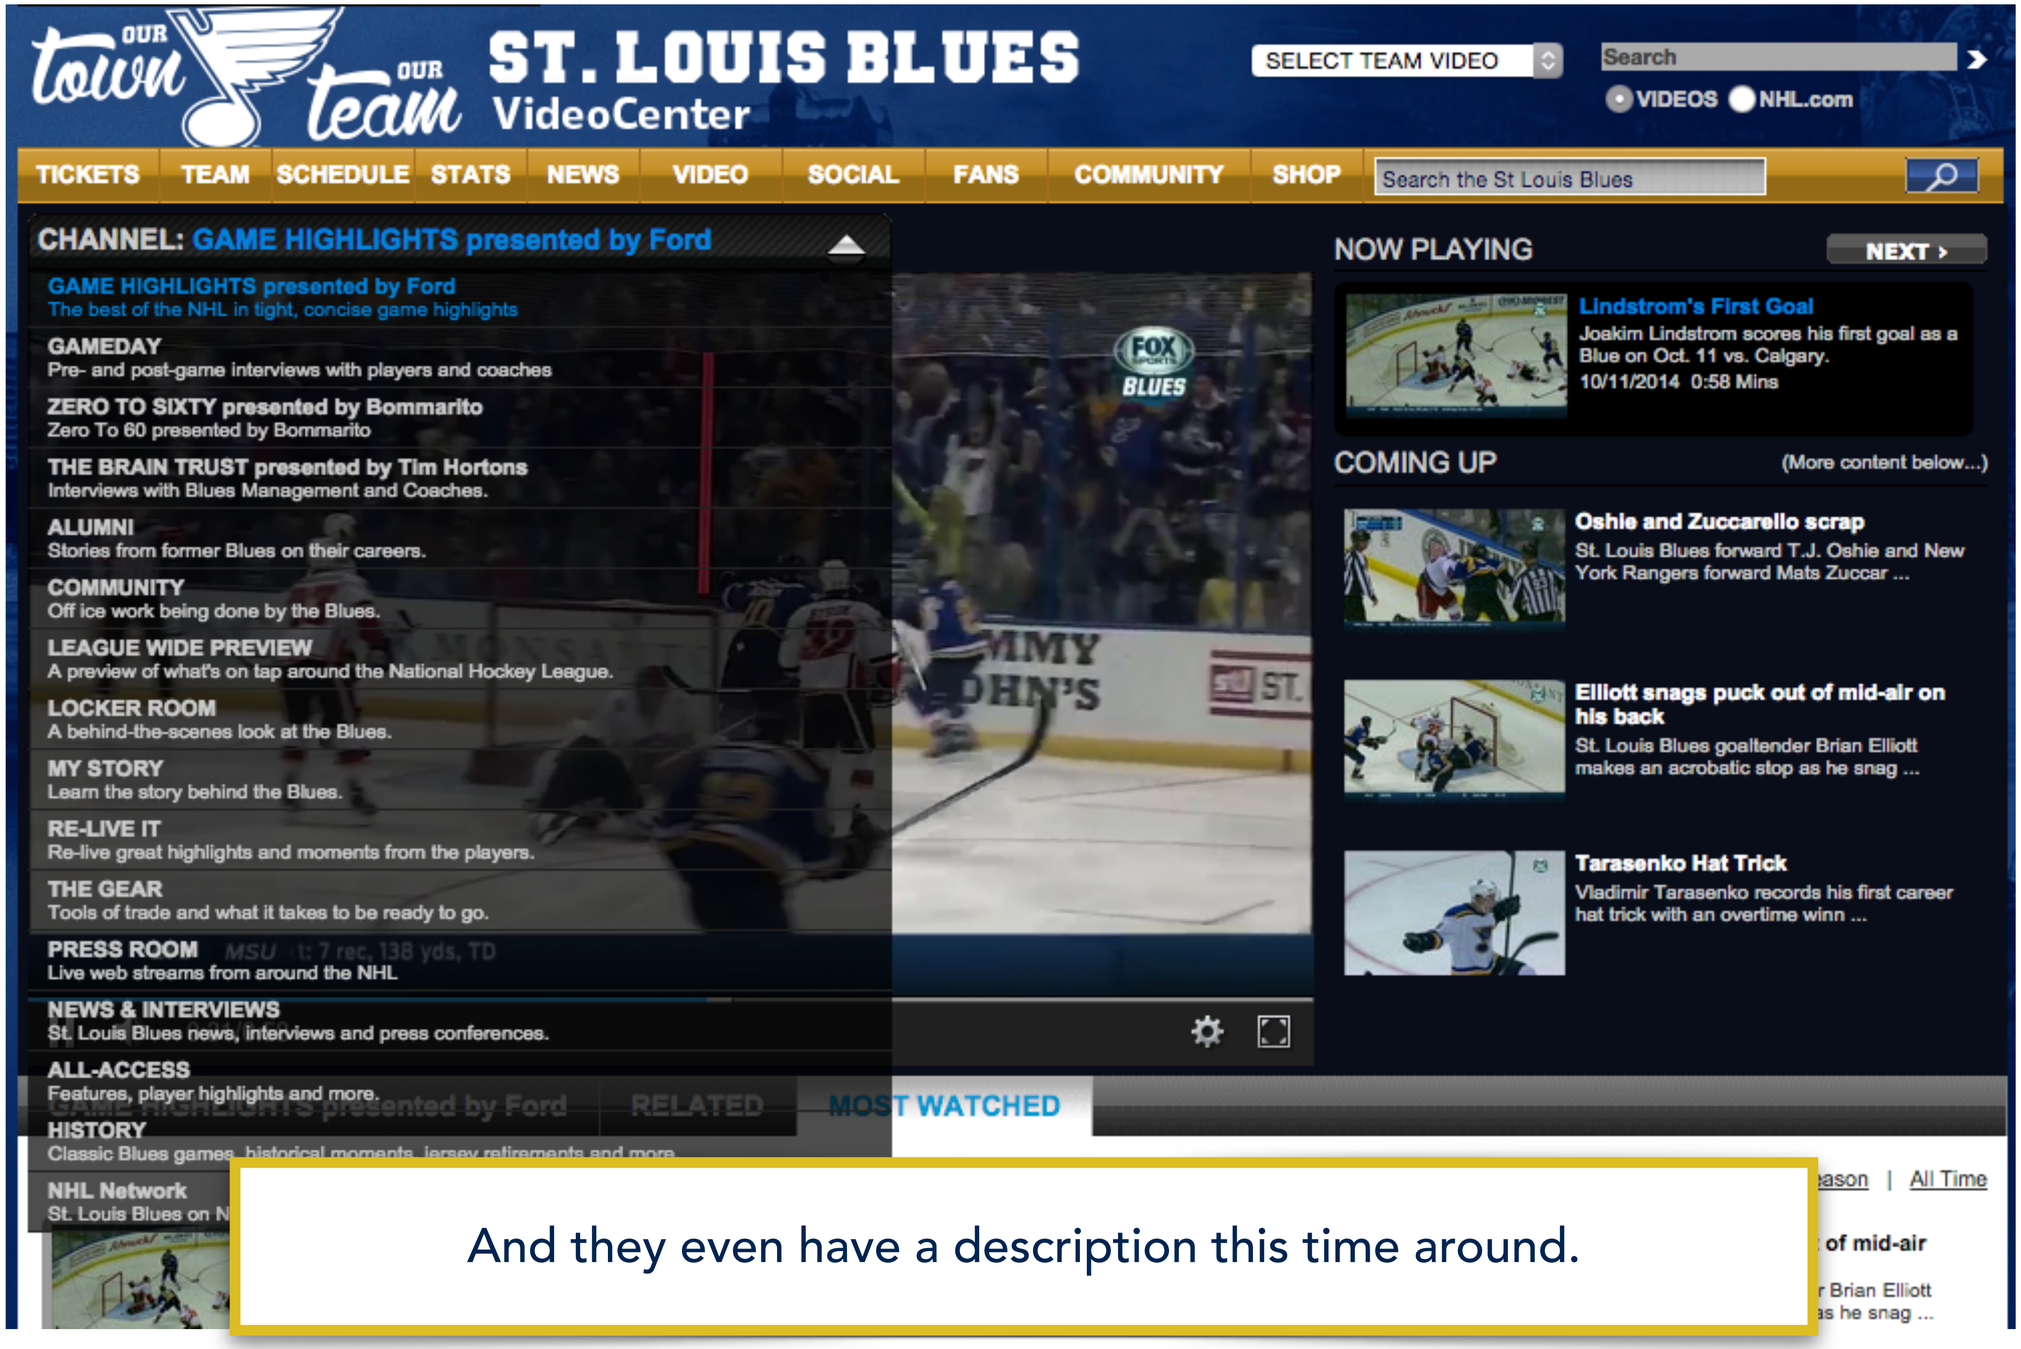
Looks like the YouTube set-up with the “Next Up” playlist on the side.



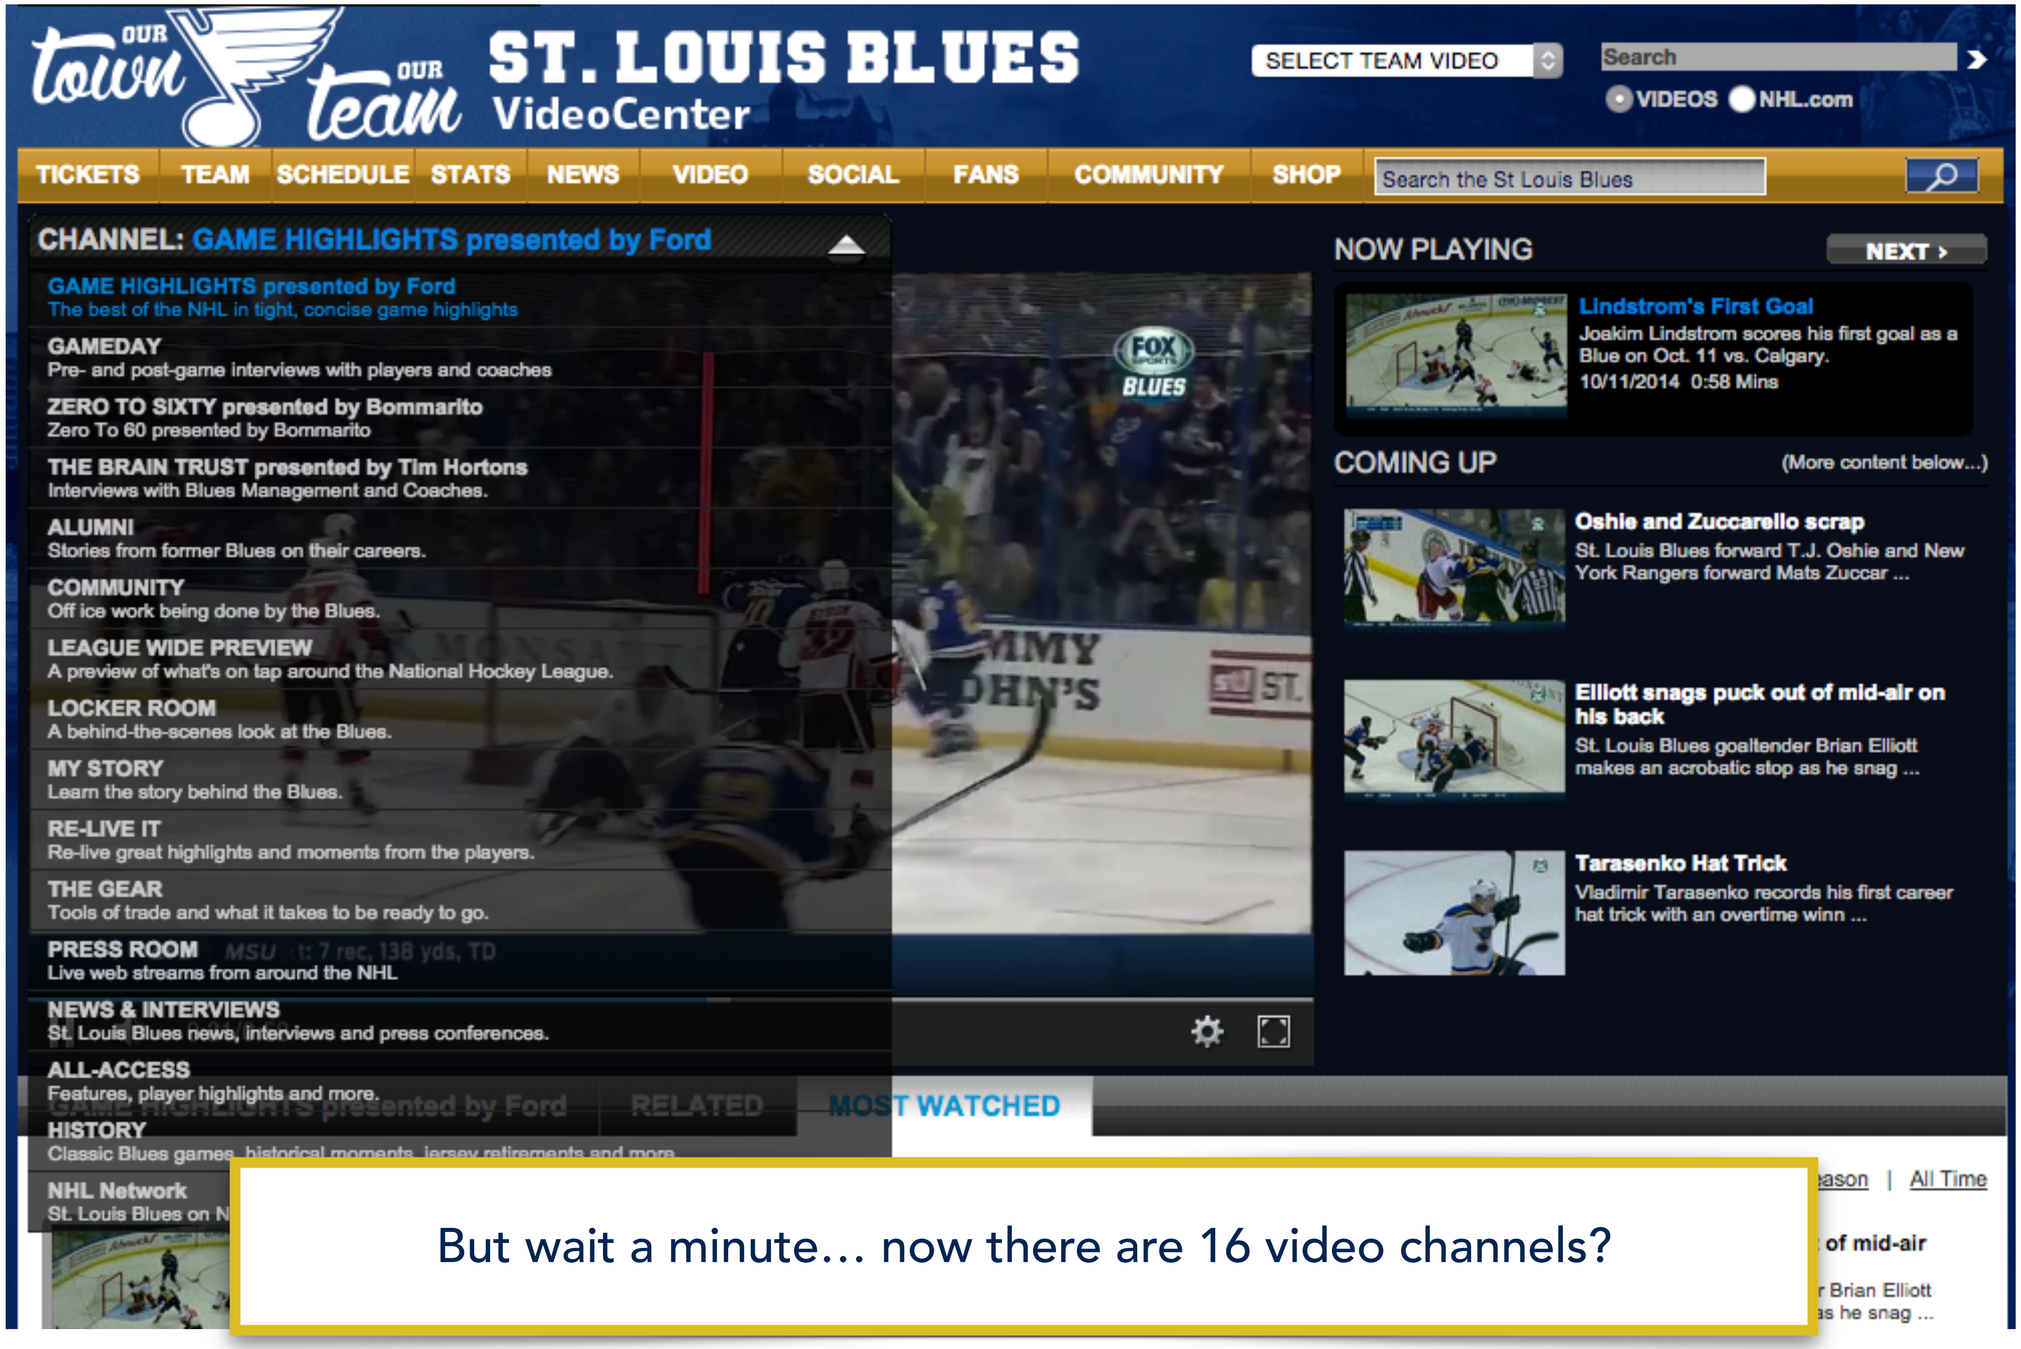
Time to check out that Channel drop-down.



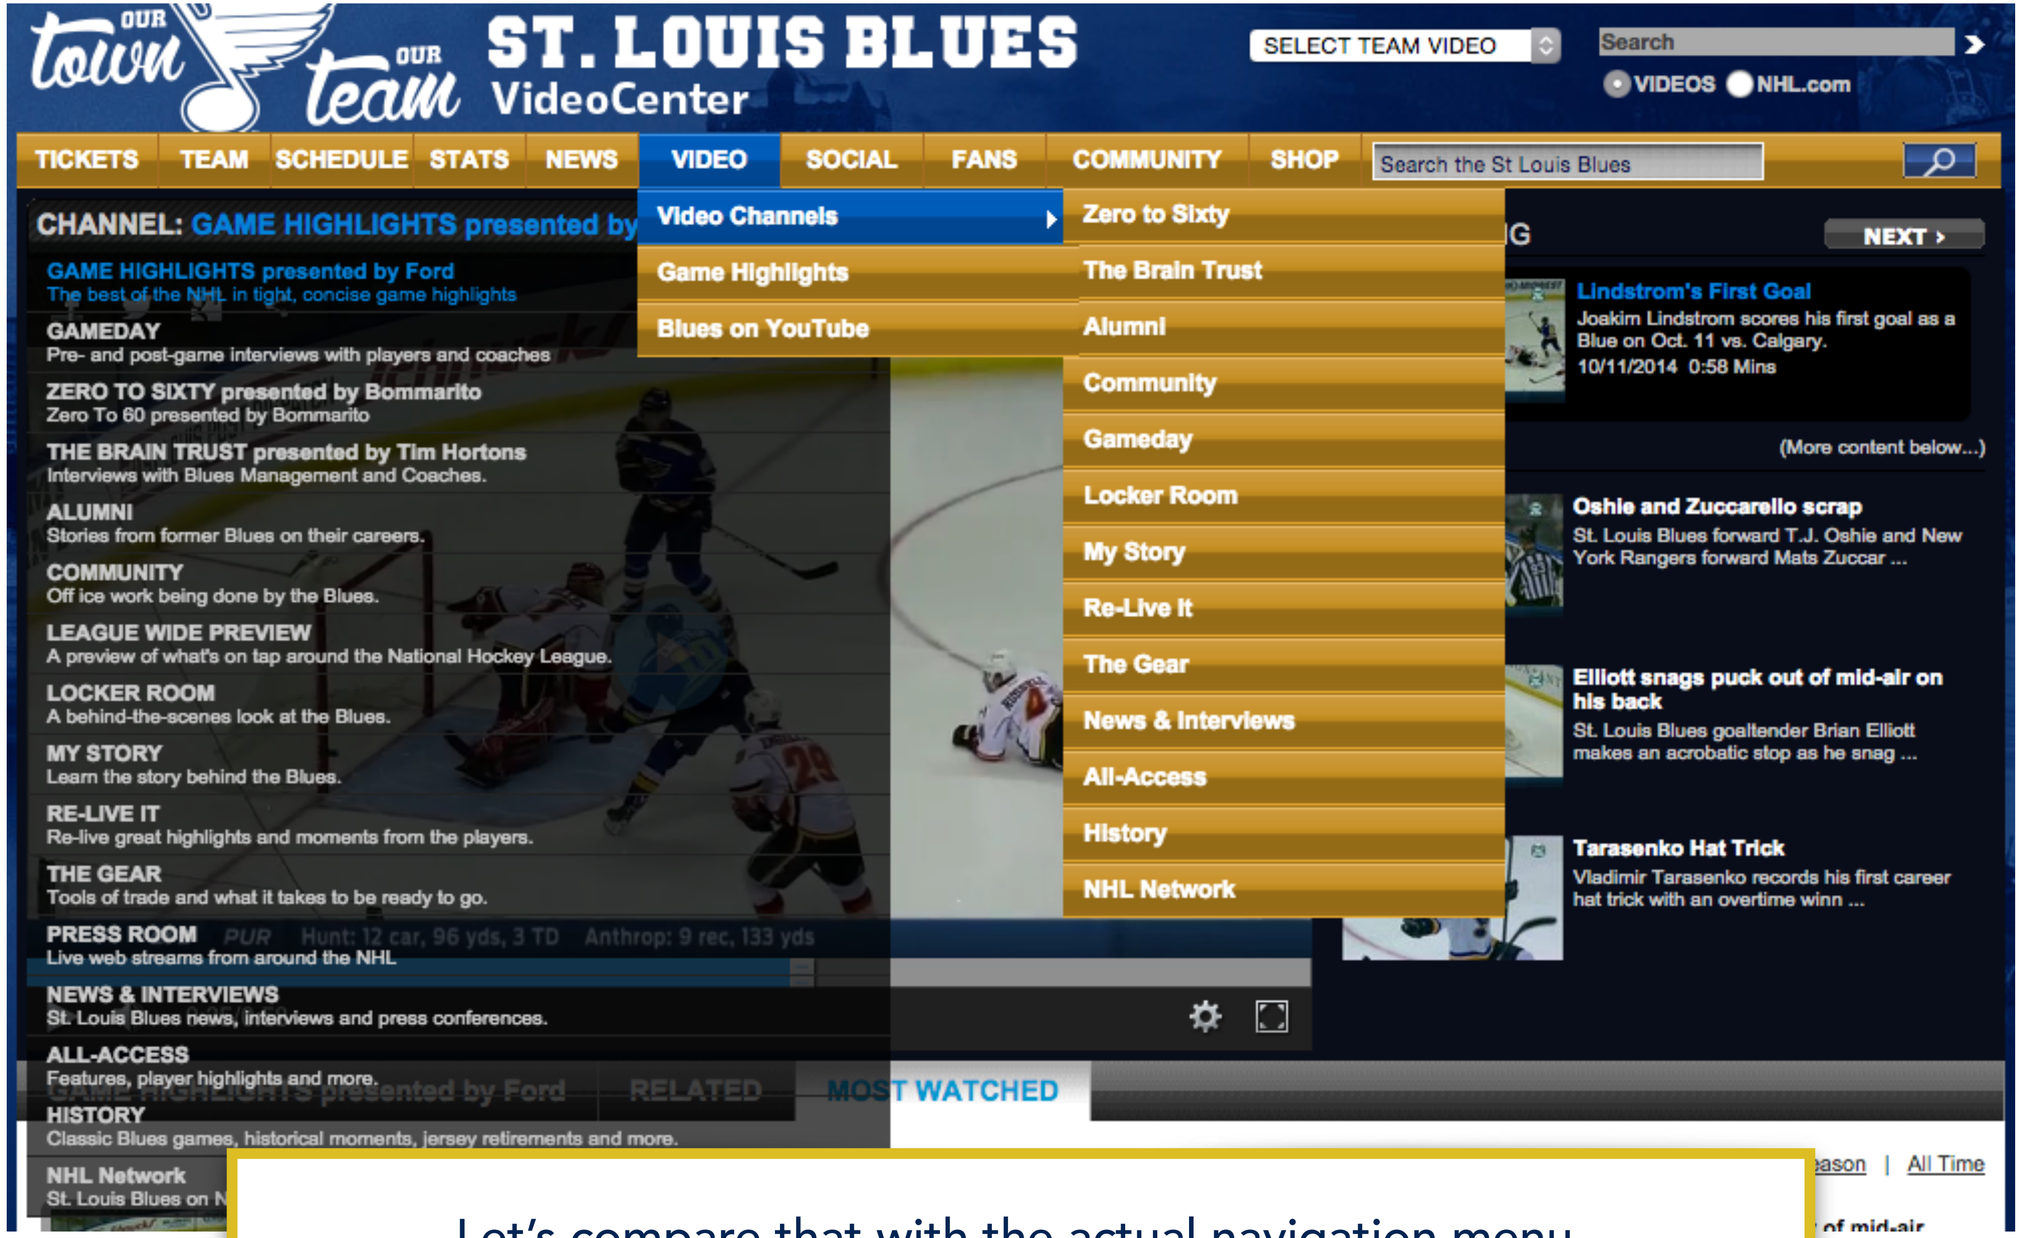
Oh, so these are the “Video Channels” we were seeing before!



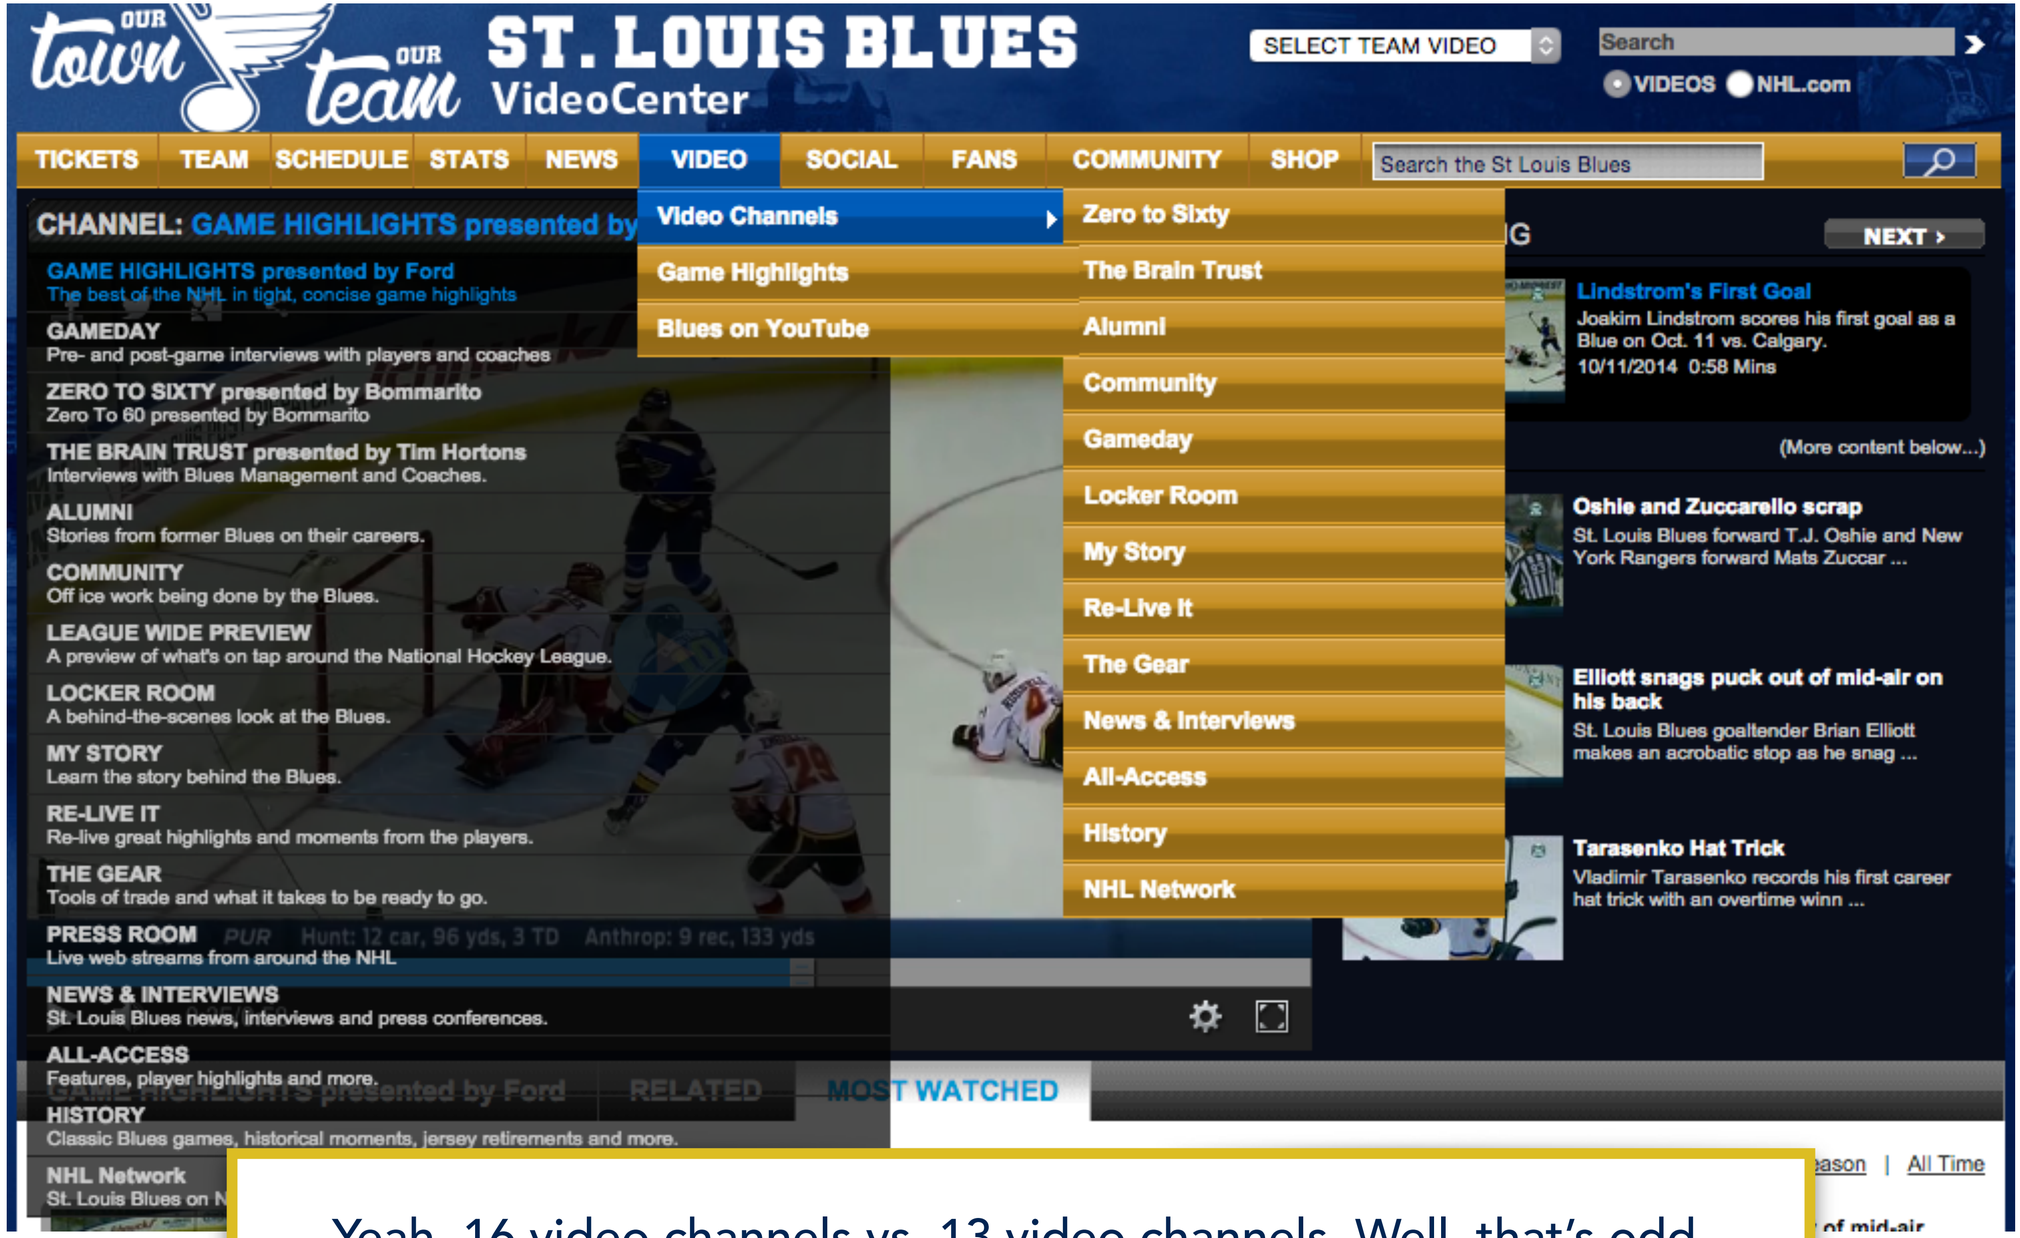
And they even have a description this time around.



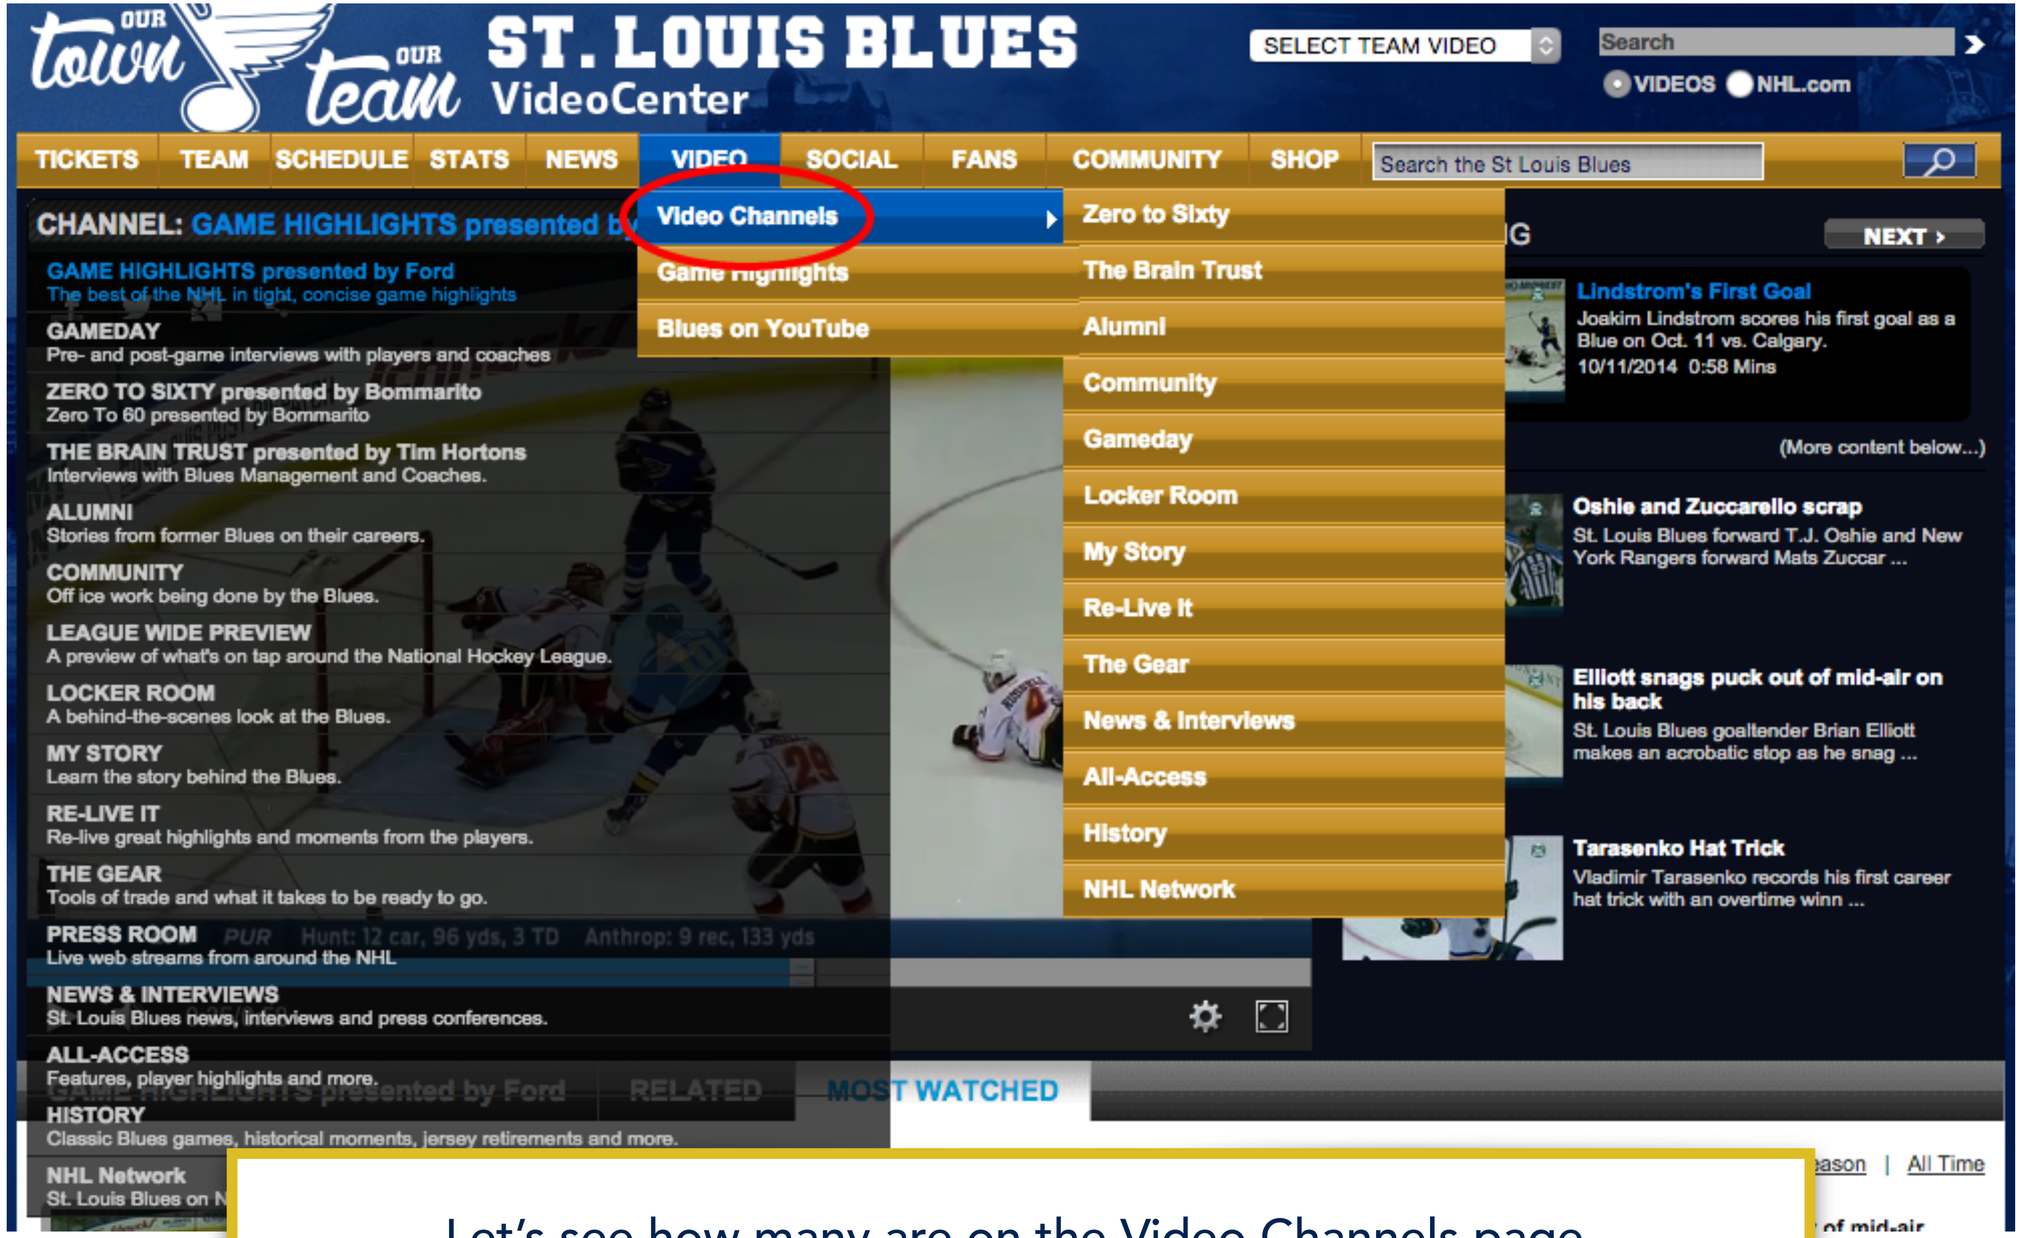
But wait a minute… now there are 16 video channels?



Let's compare that with the actual navigation menu.



Yeah, 16 video channels vs. 13 video channels. Well, that's odd.



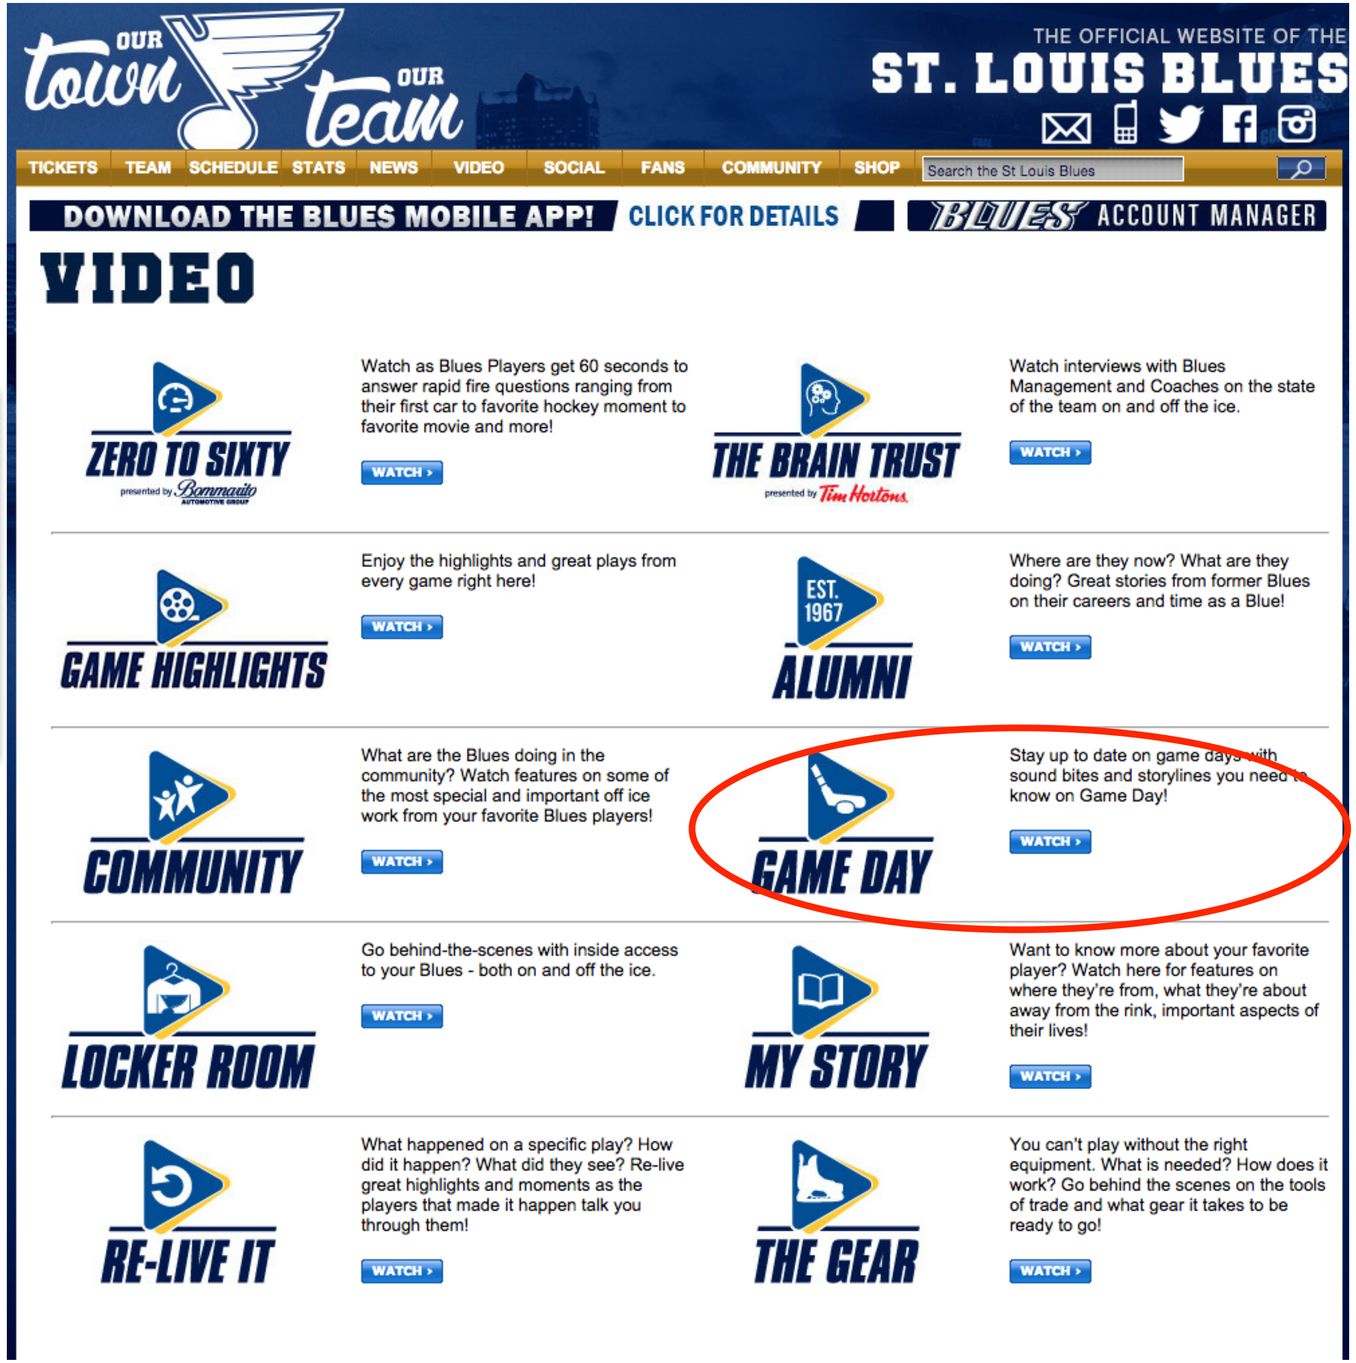
Let's see how many are on the Video Channels page.

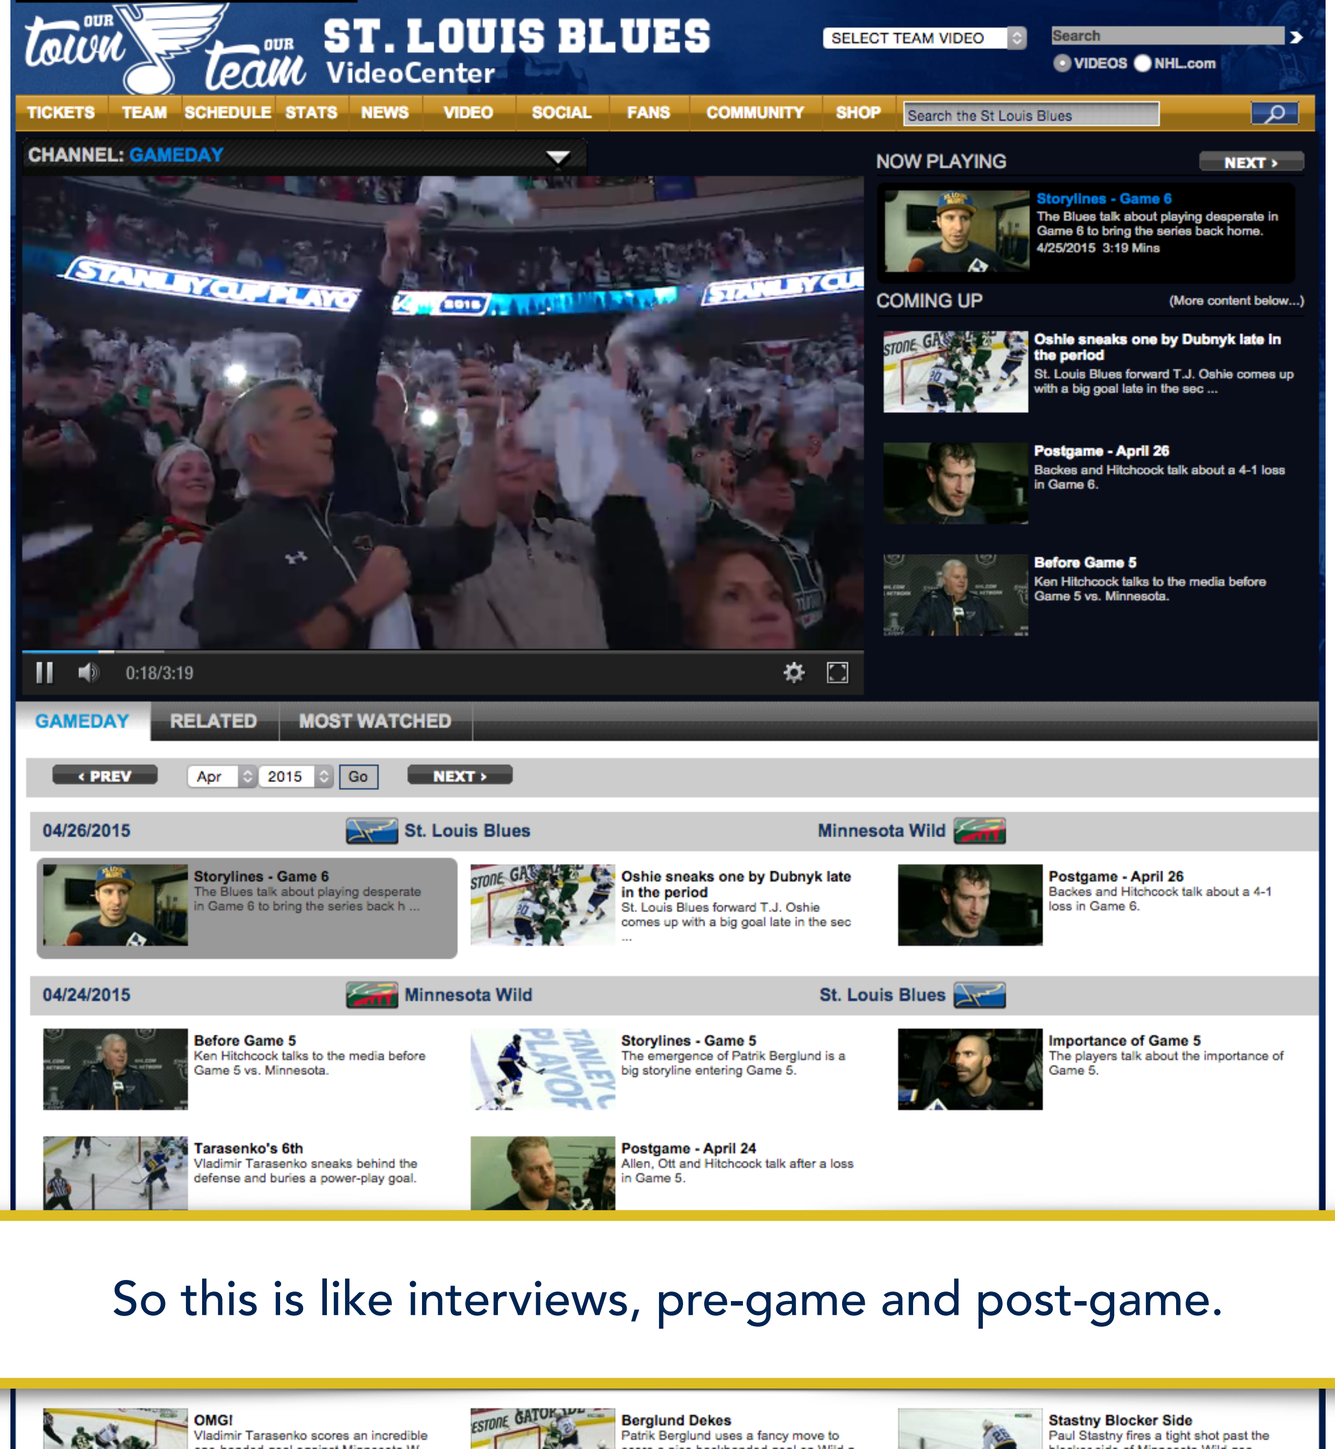
Now there are 10 video channels?!

WHAT IS HAPPENING?!

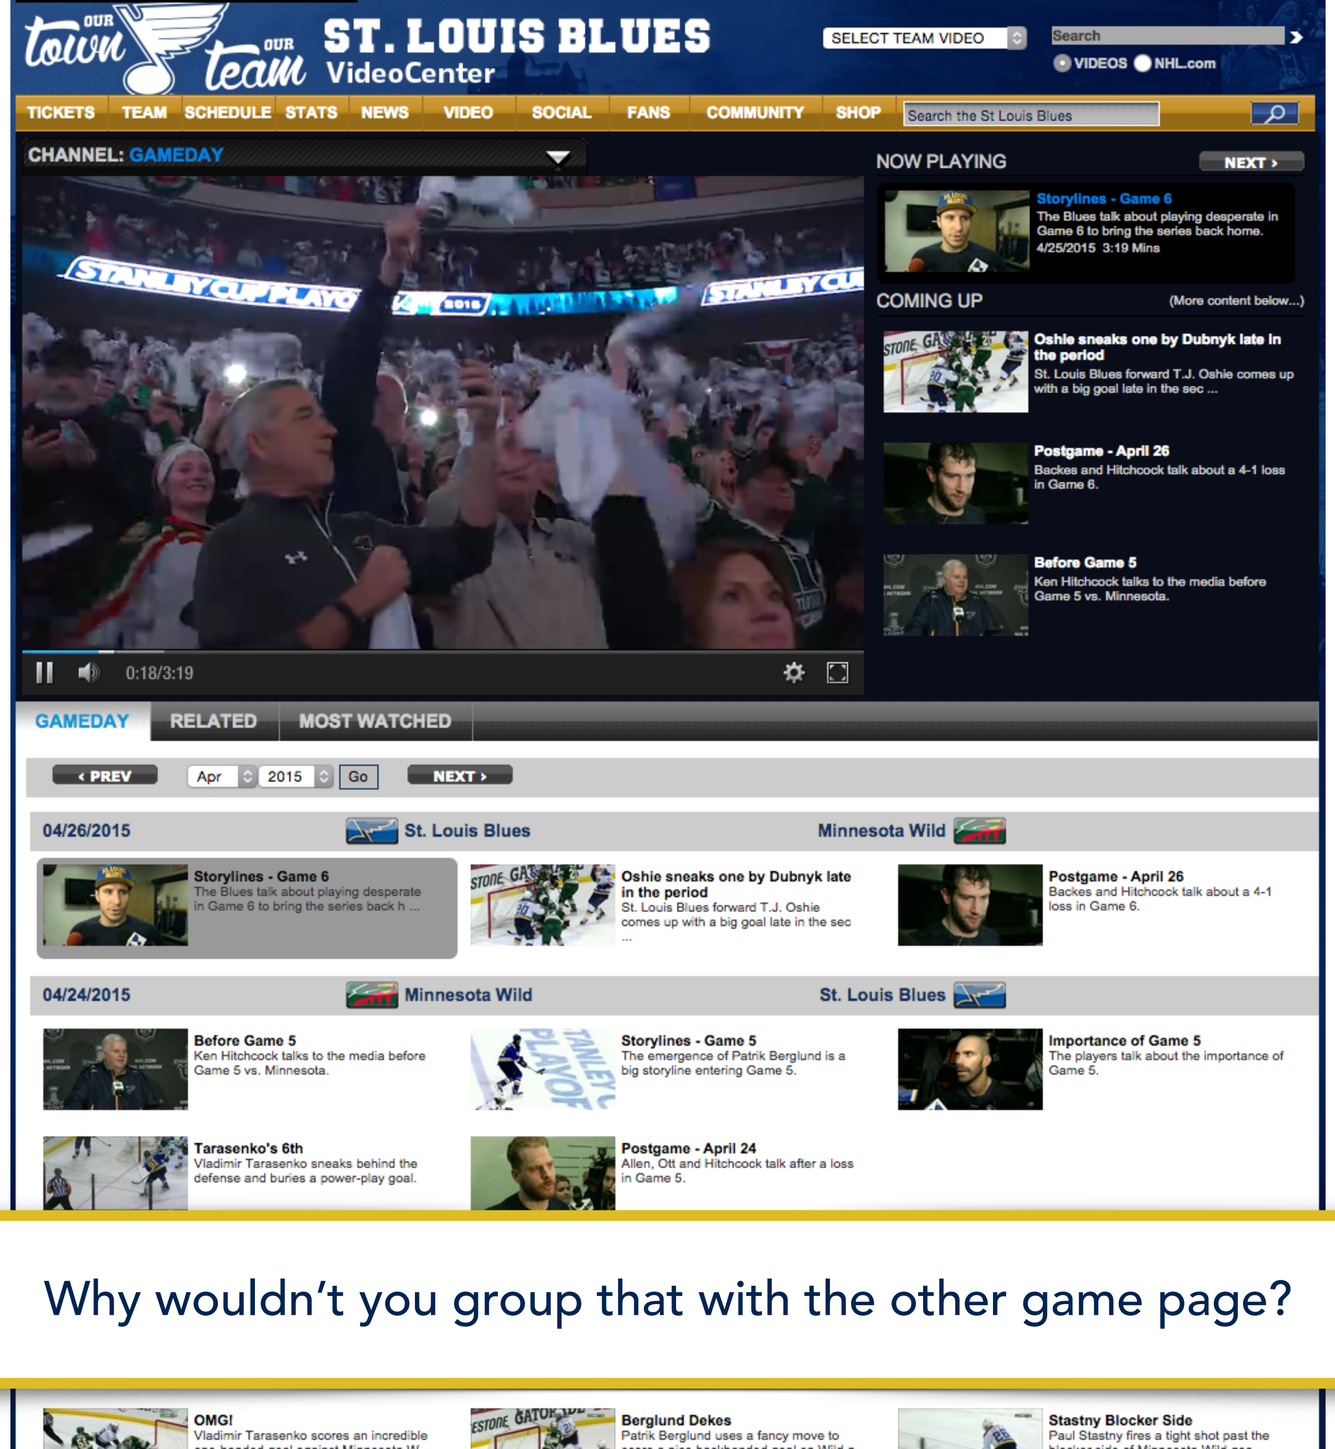
Alright, well, let's see what's going on in this "Game Day" channel.

I don’t really see how this is supposed to be different from the main channel we were on before.

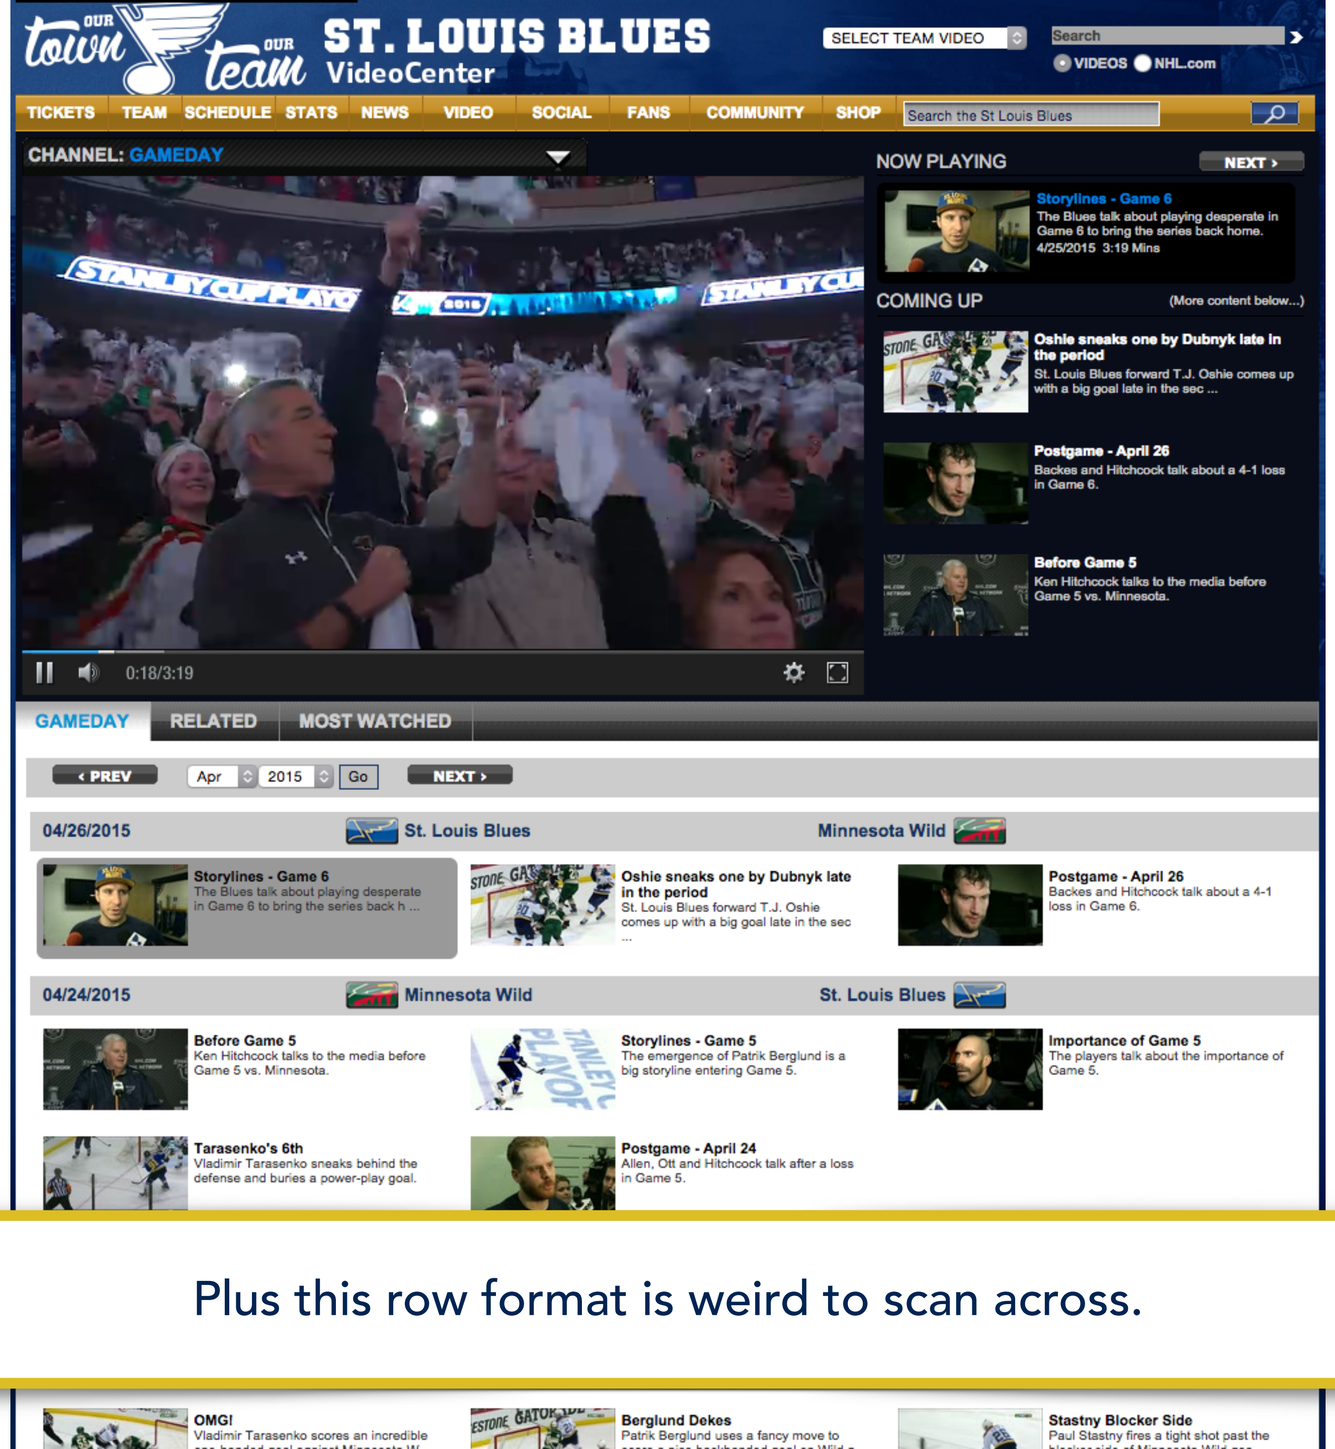




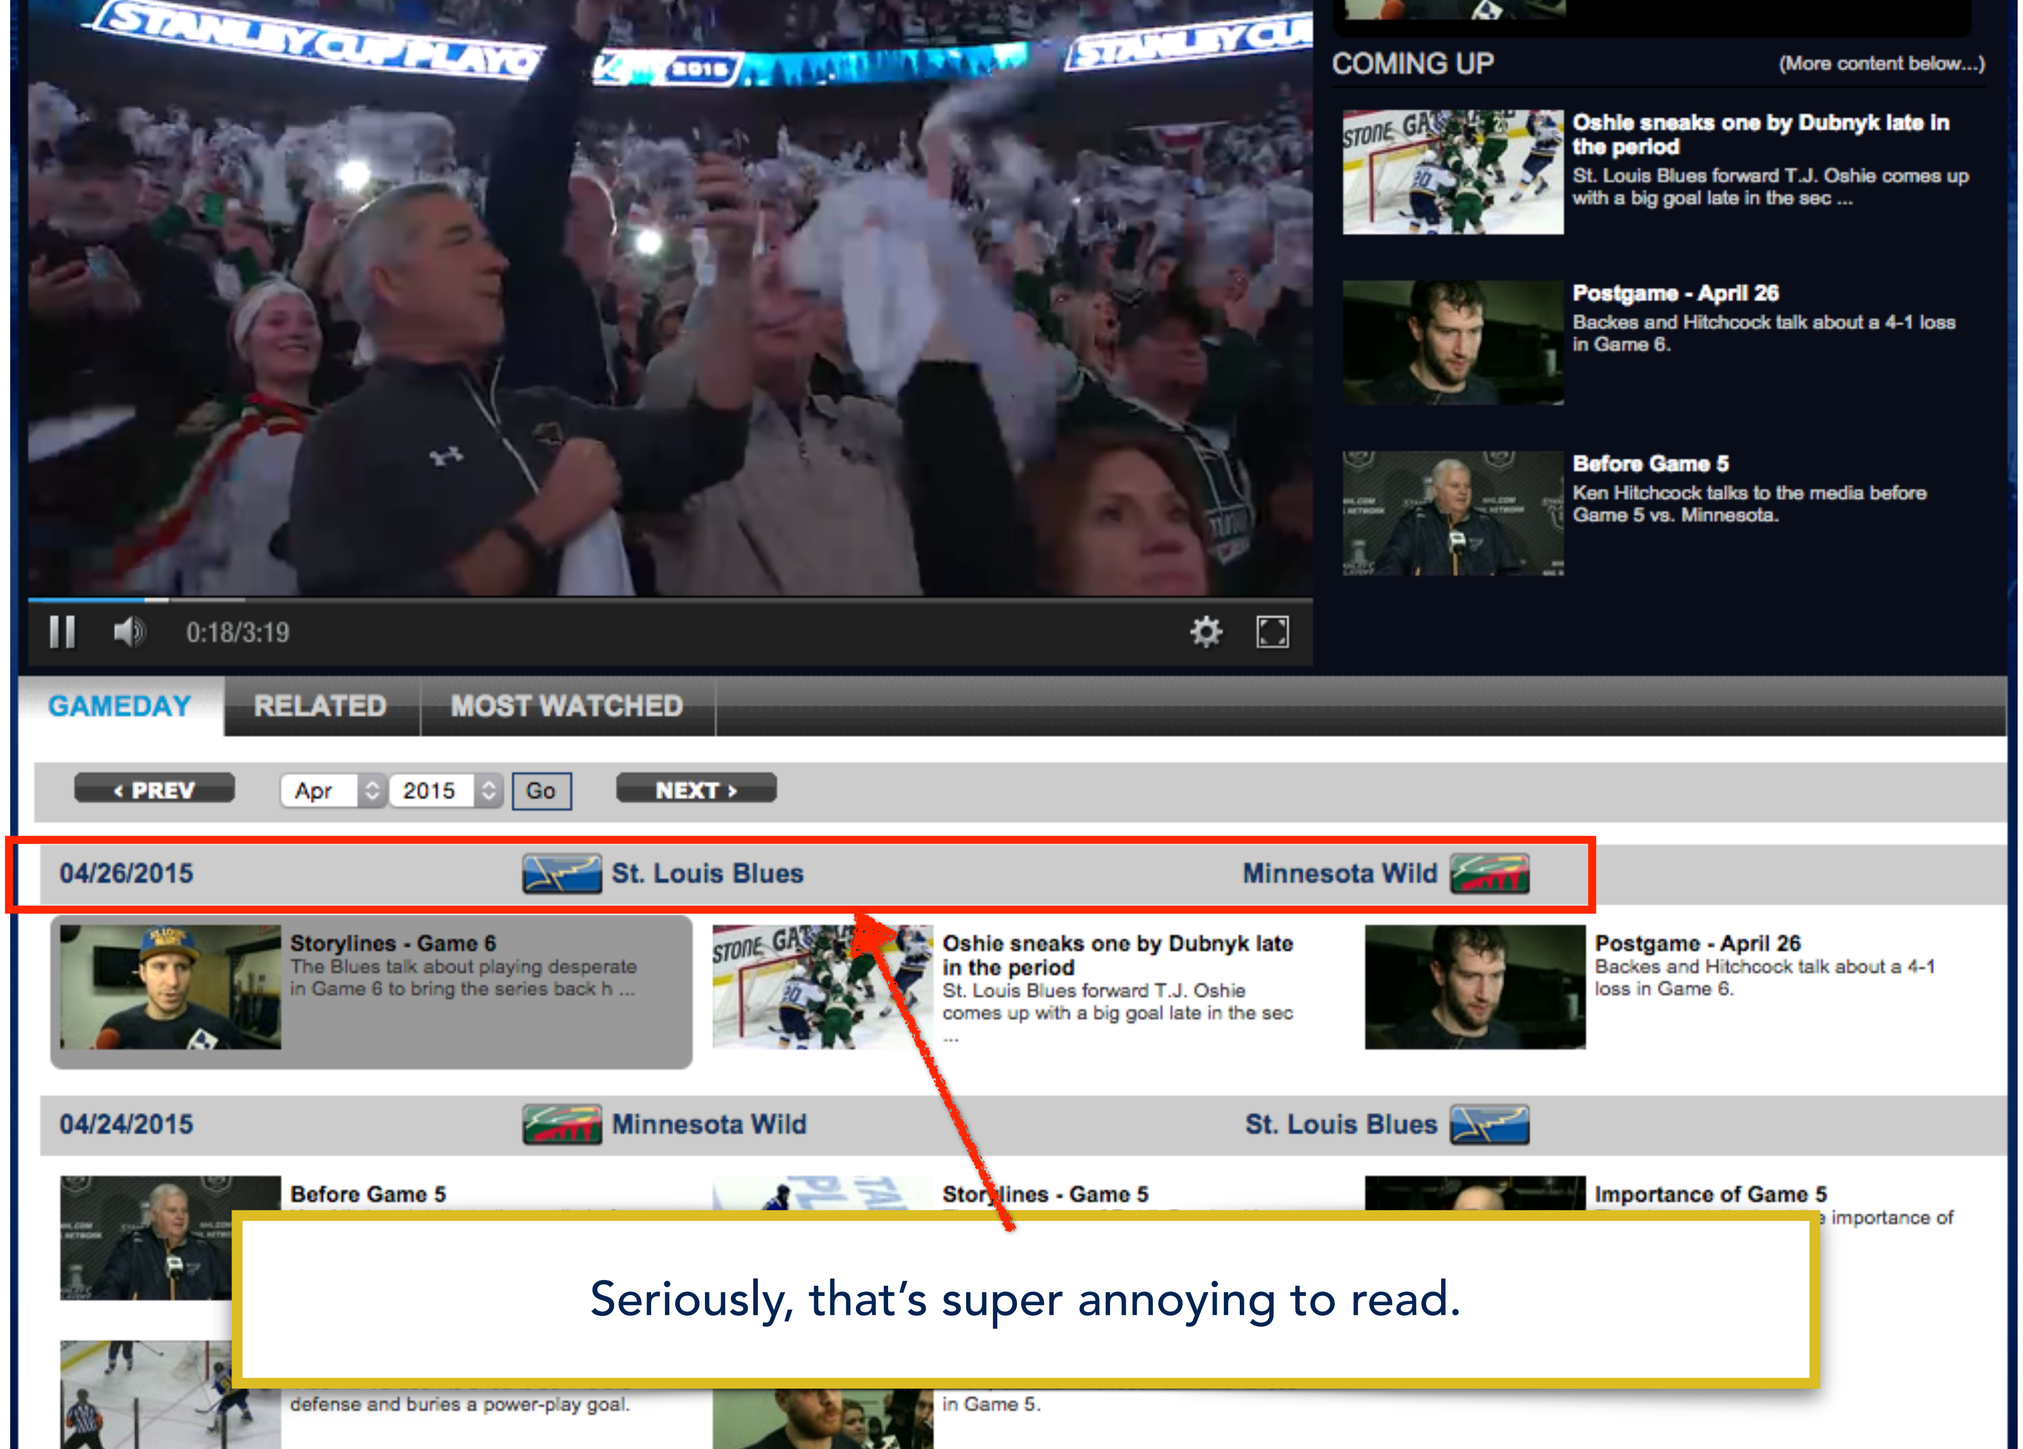
So this is like interviews, pre-game and post-game.



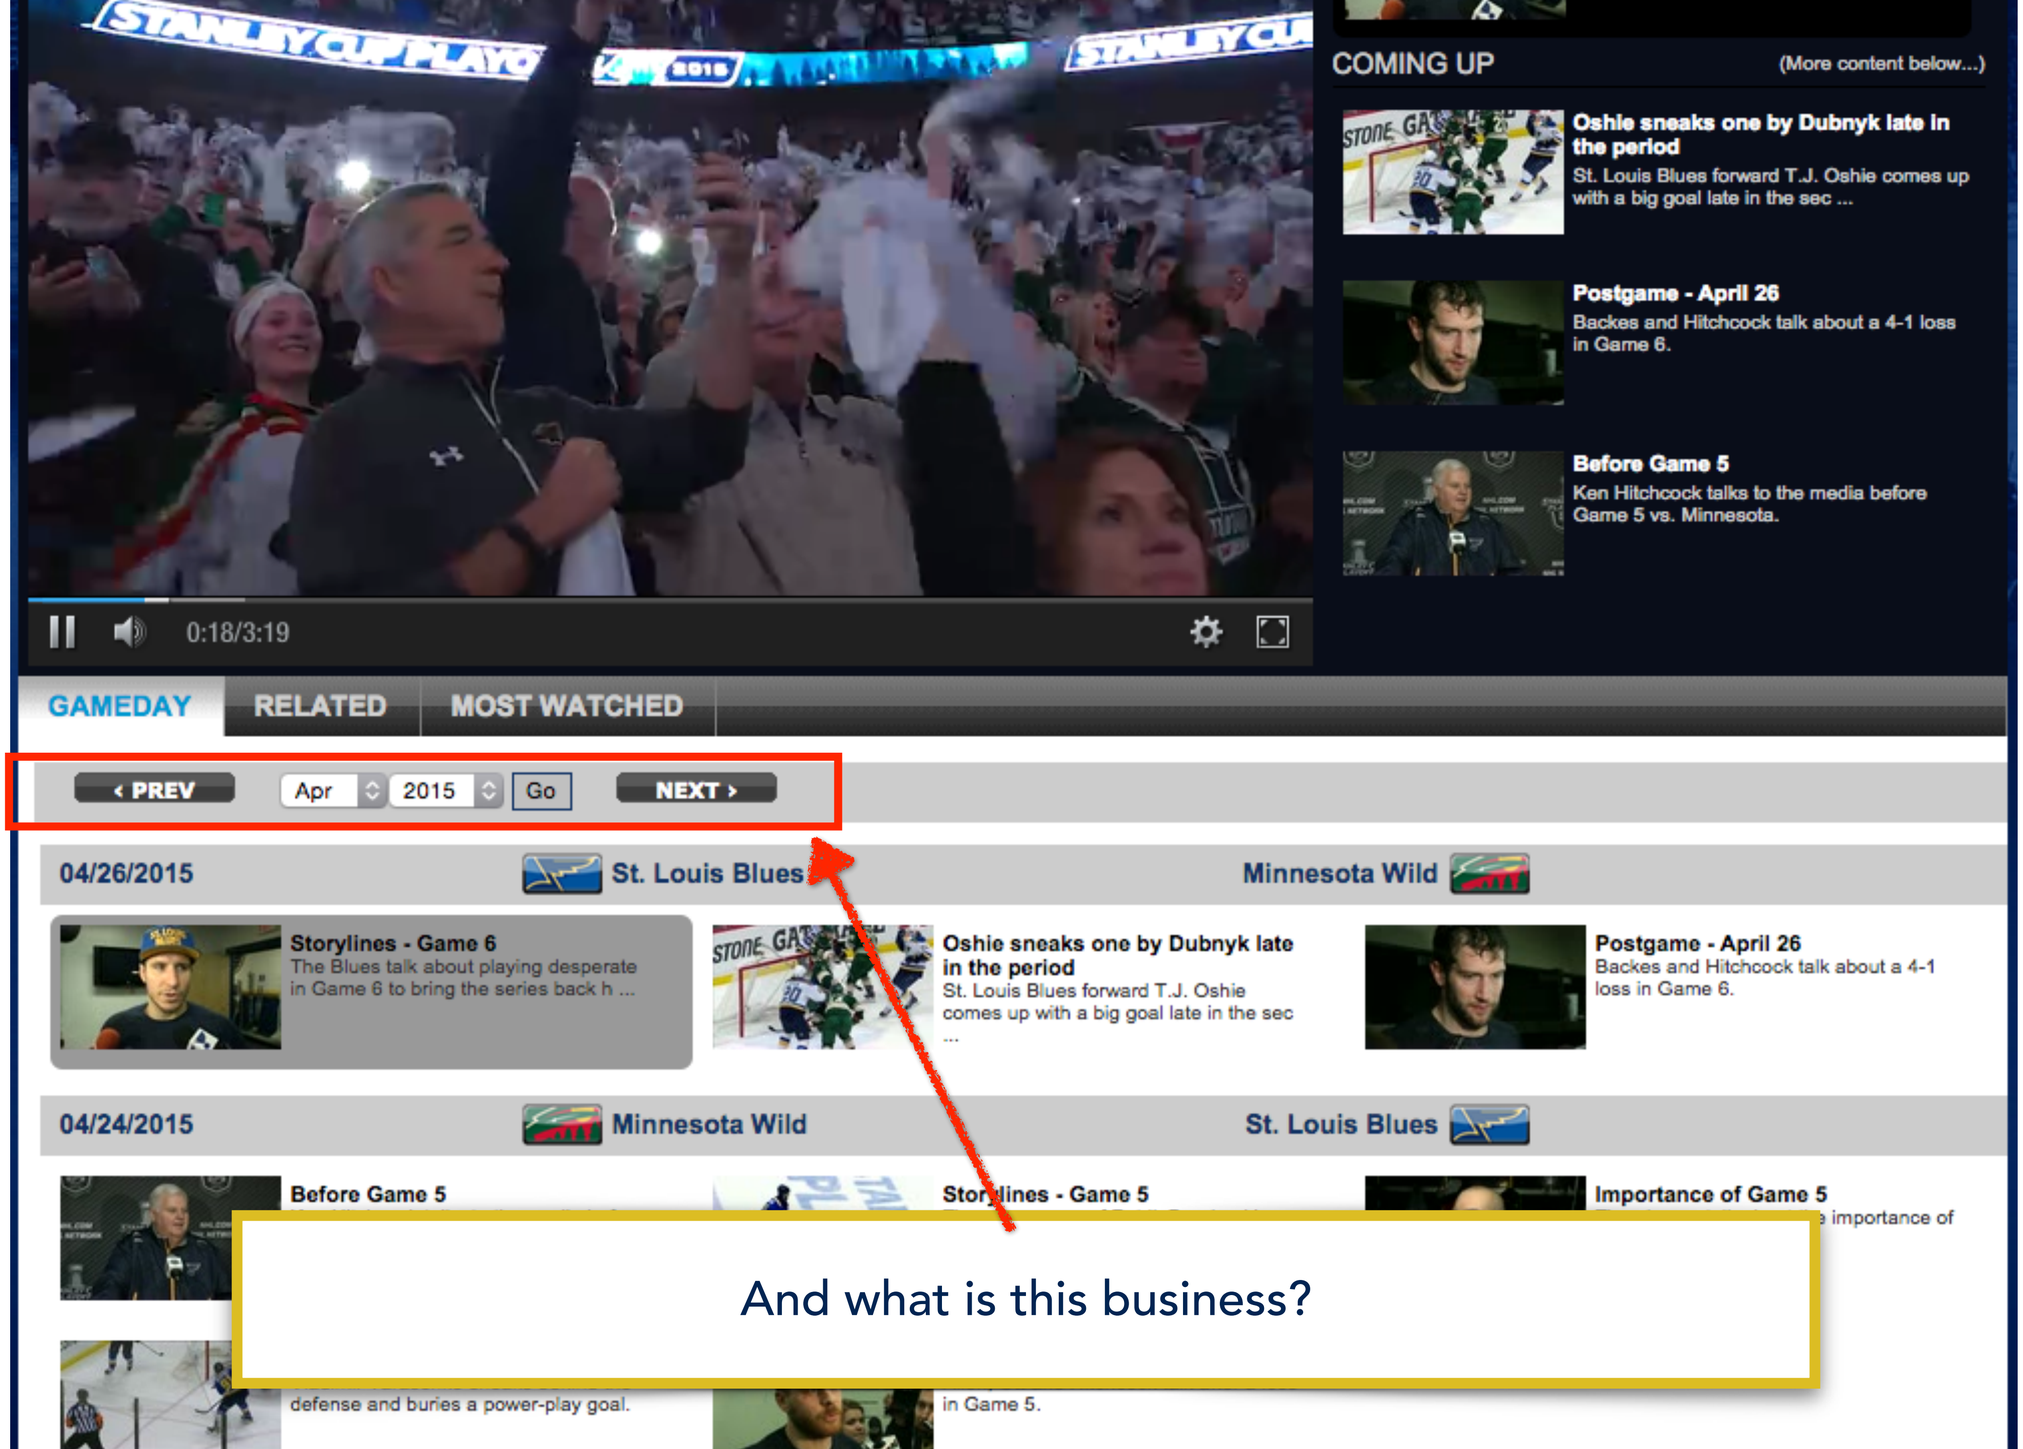
Why wouldn't you group that with the other game page?



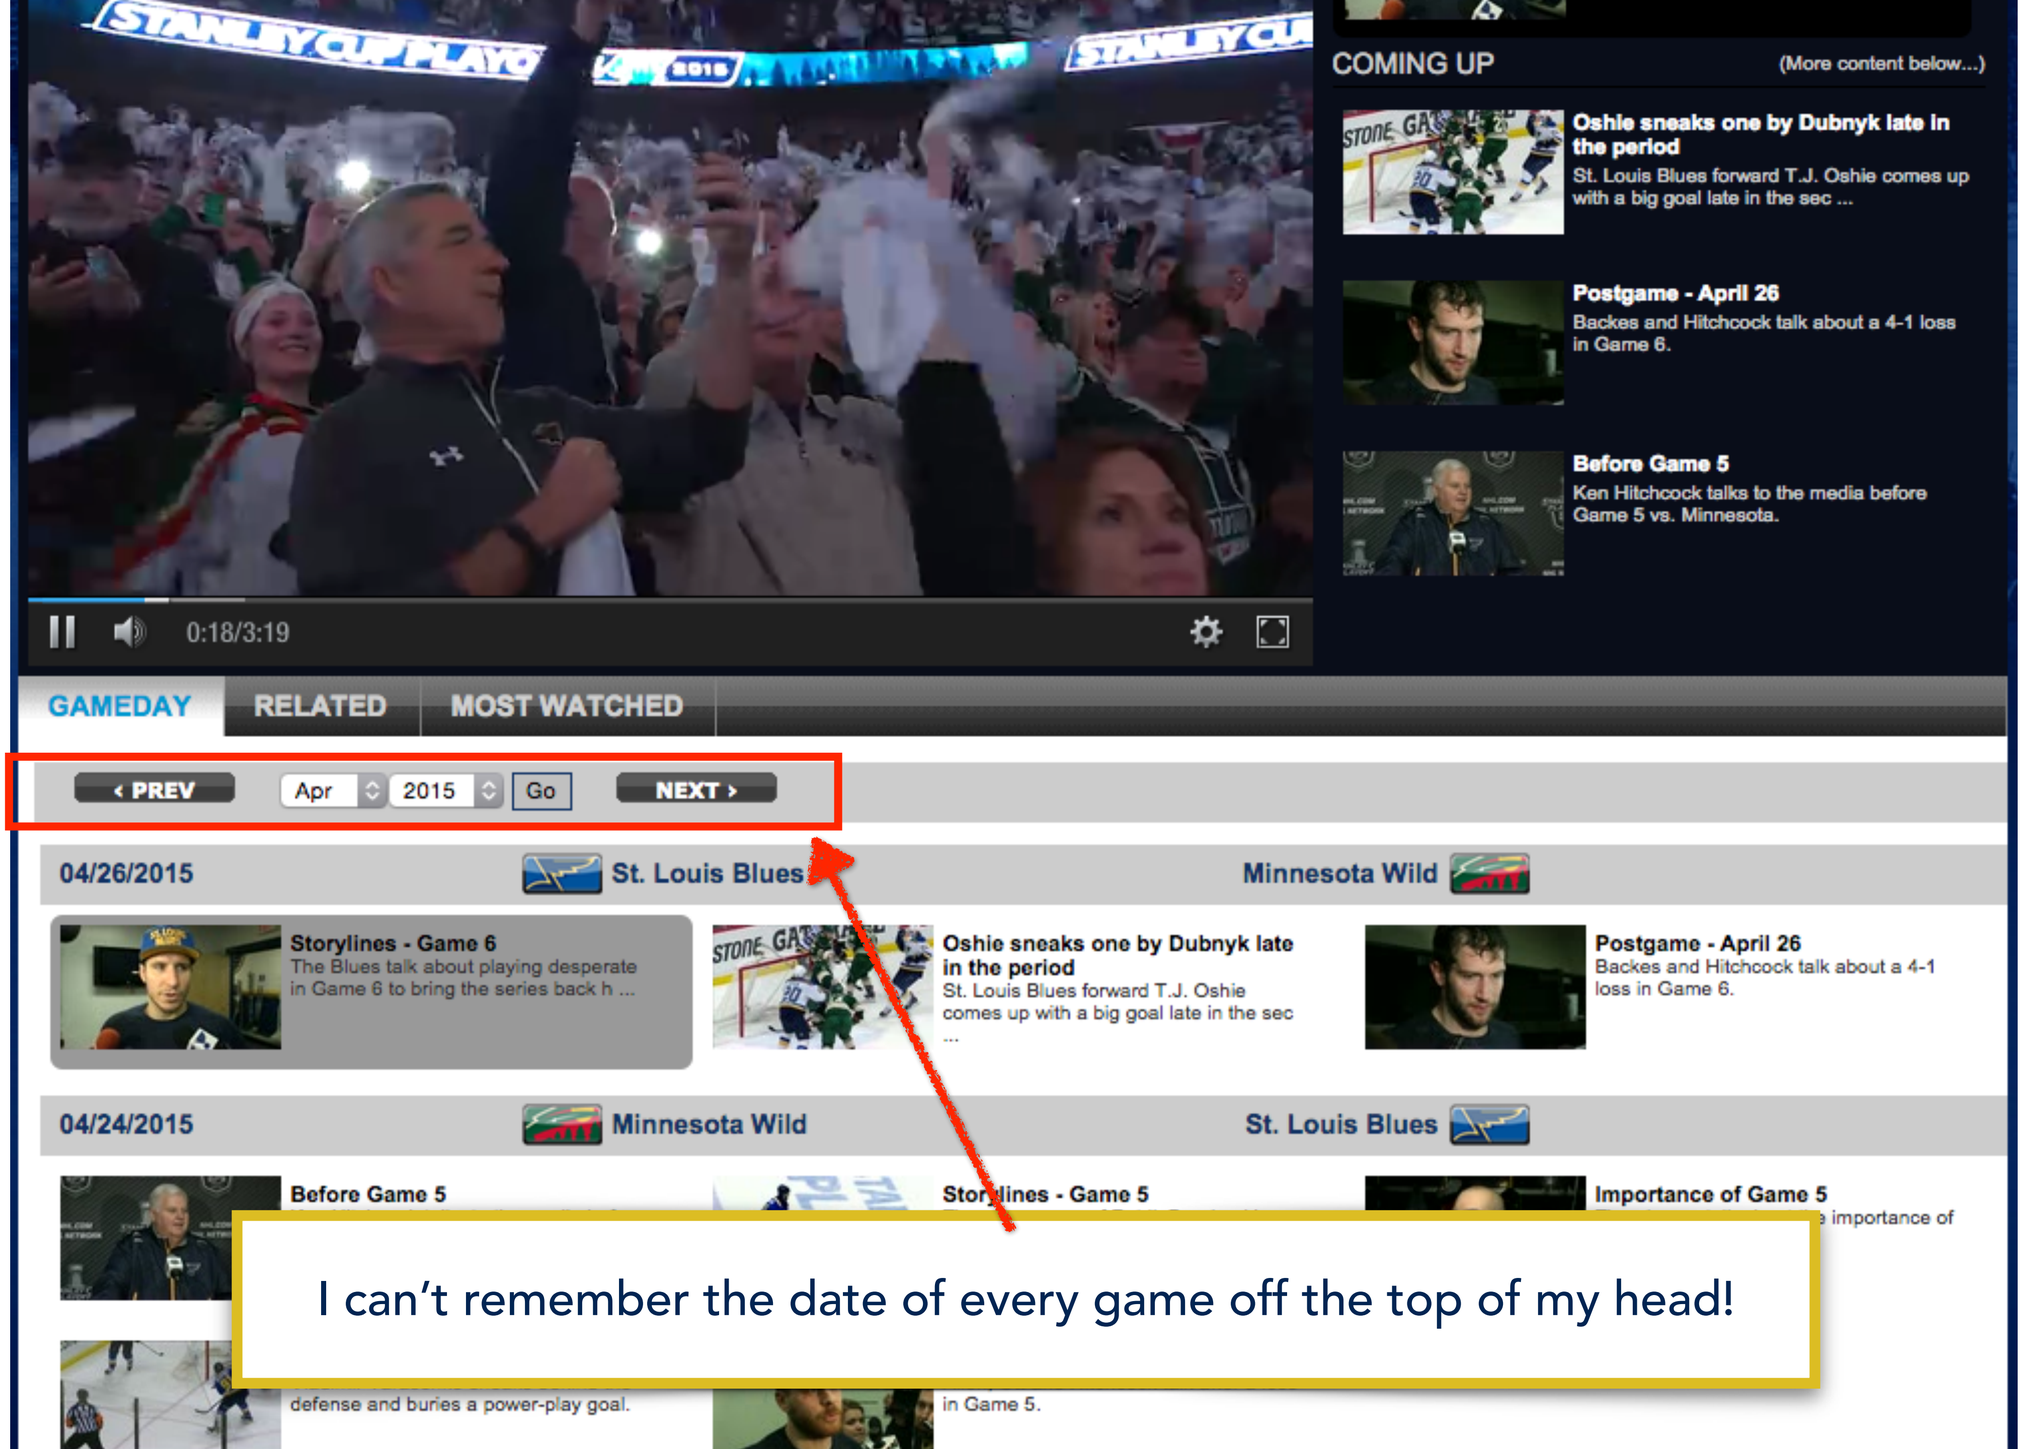
Plus this row format is weird to scan across.



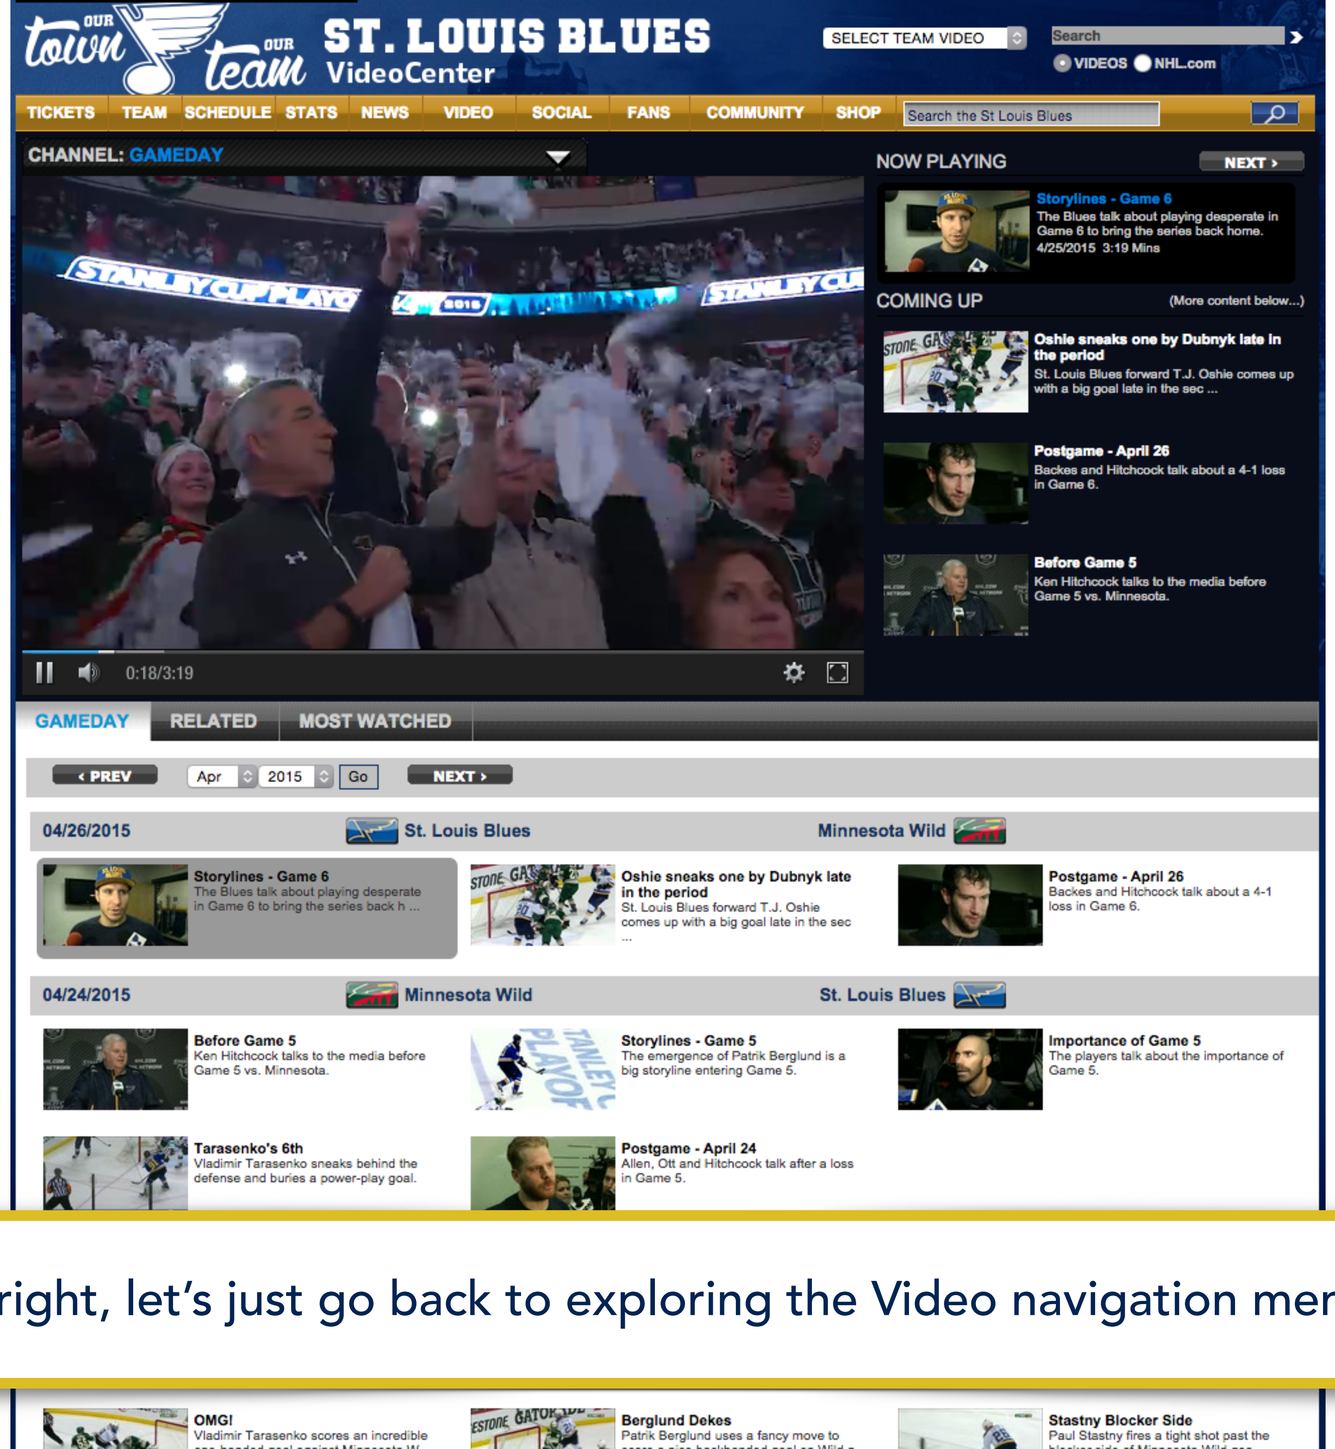
Seriously, that's super annoying to read.



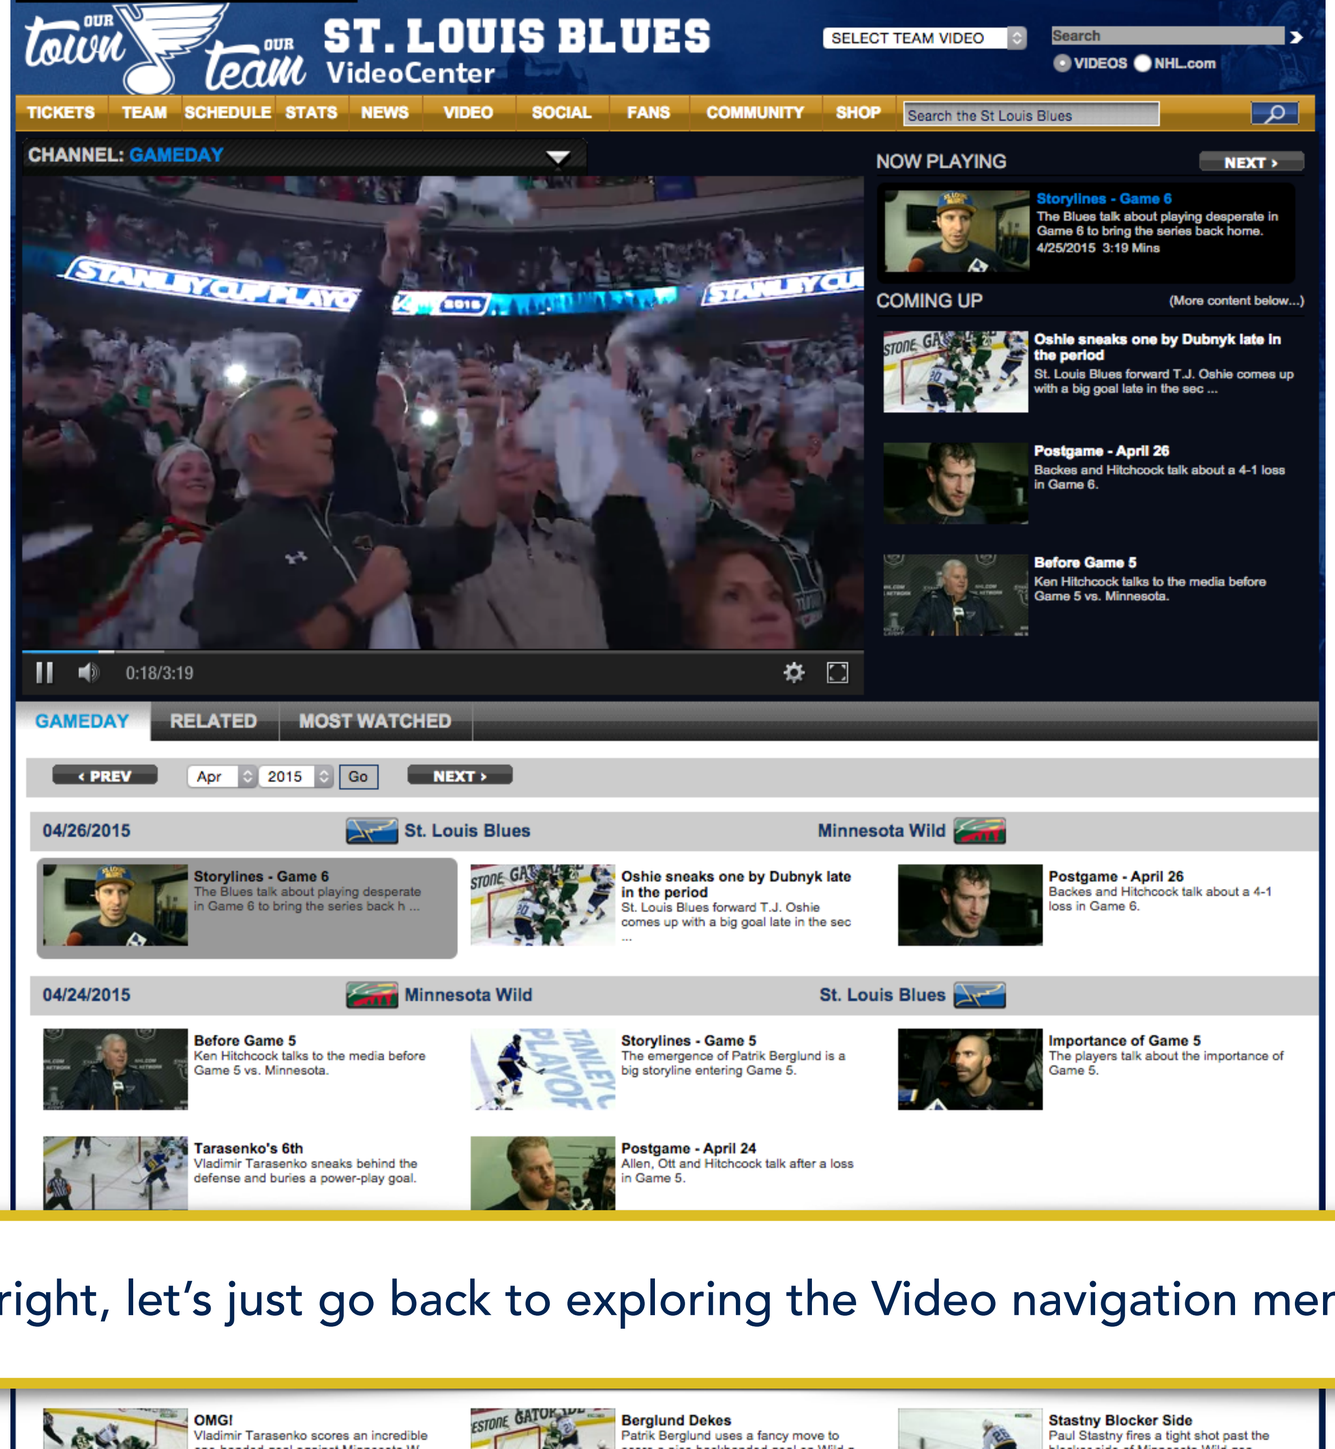
And what is this business?



I can't remember the date of every game off the top of my head!

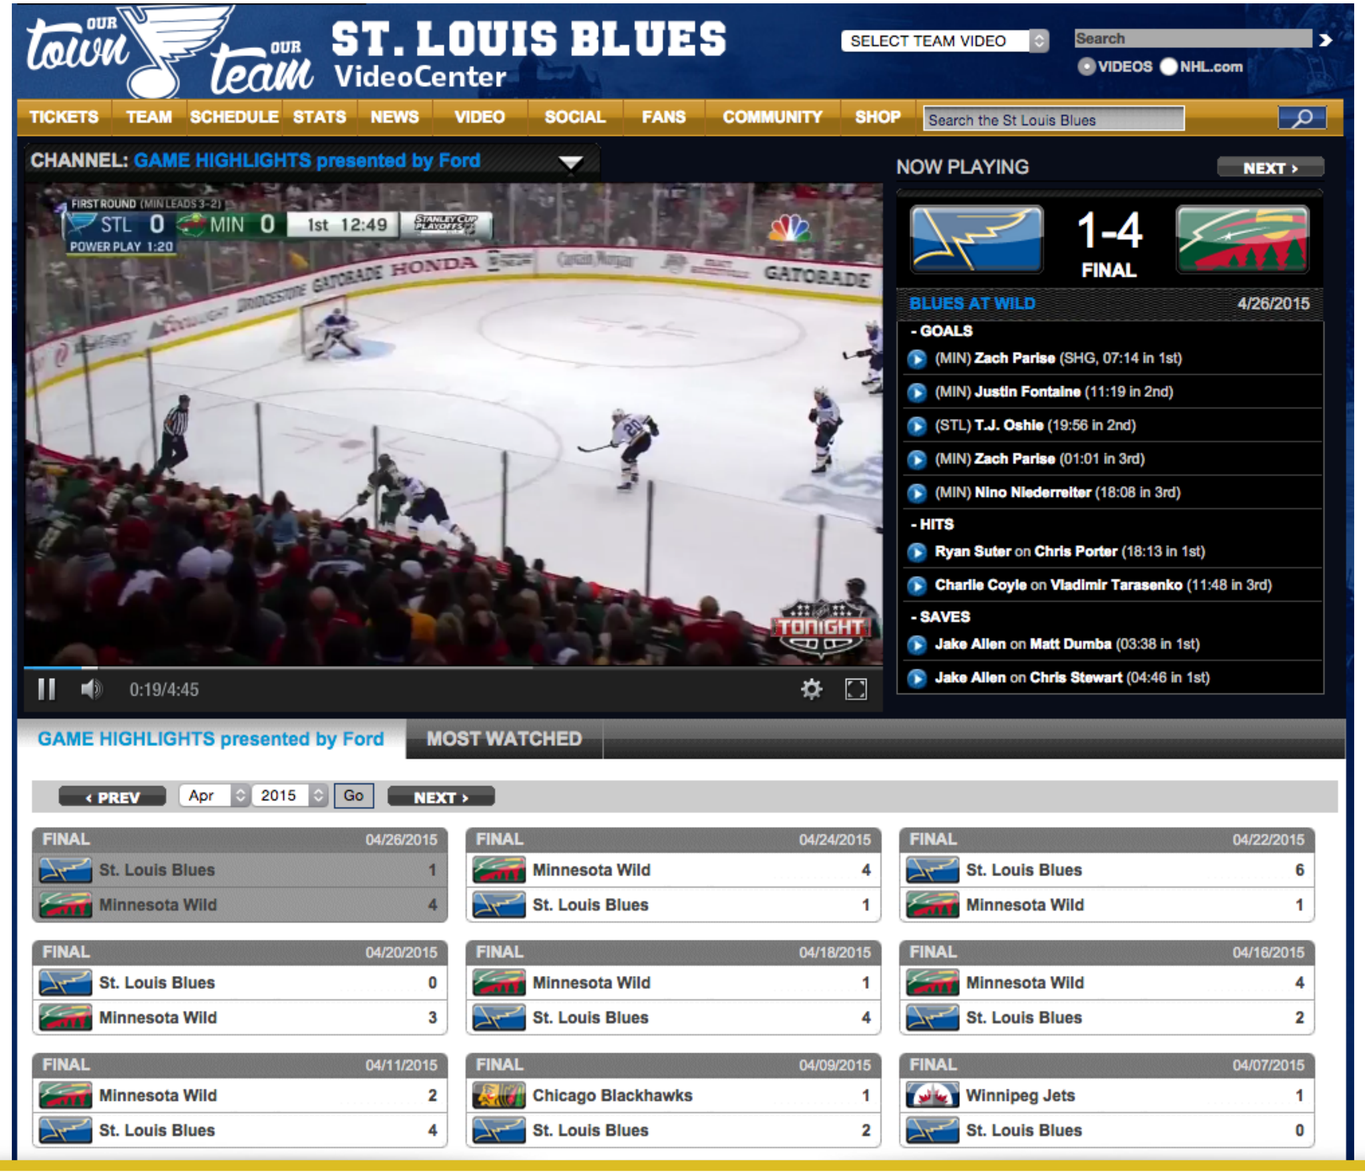


Alright, let's just go back to exploring the Video navigation menu.

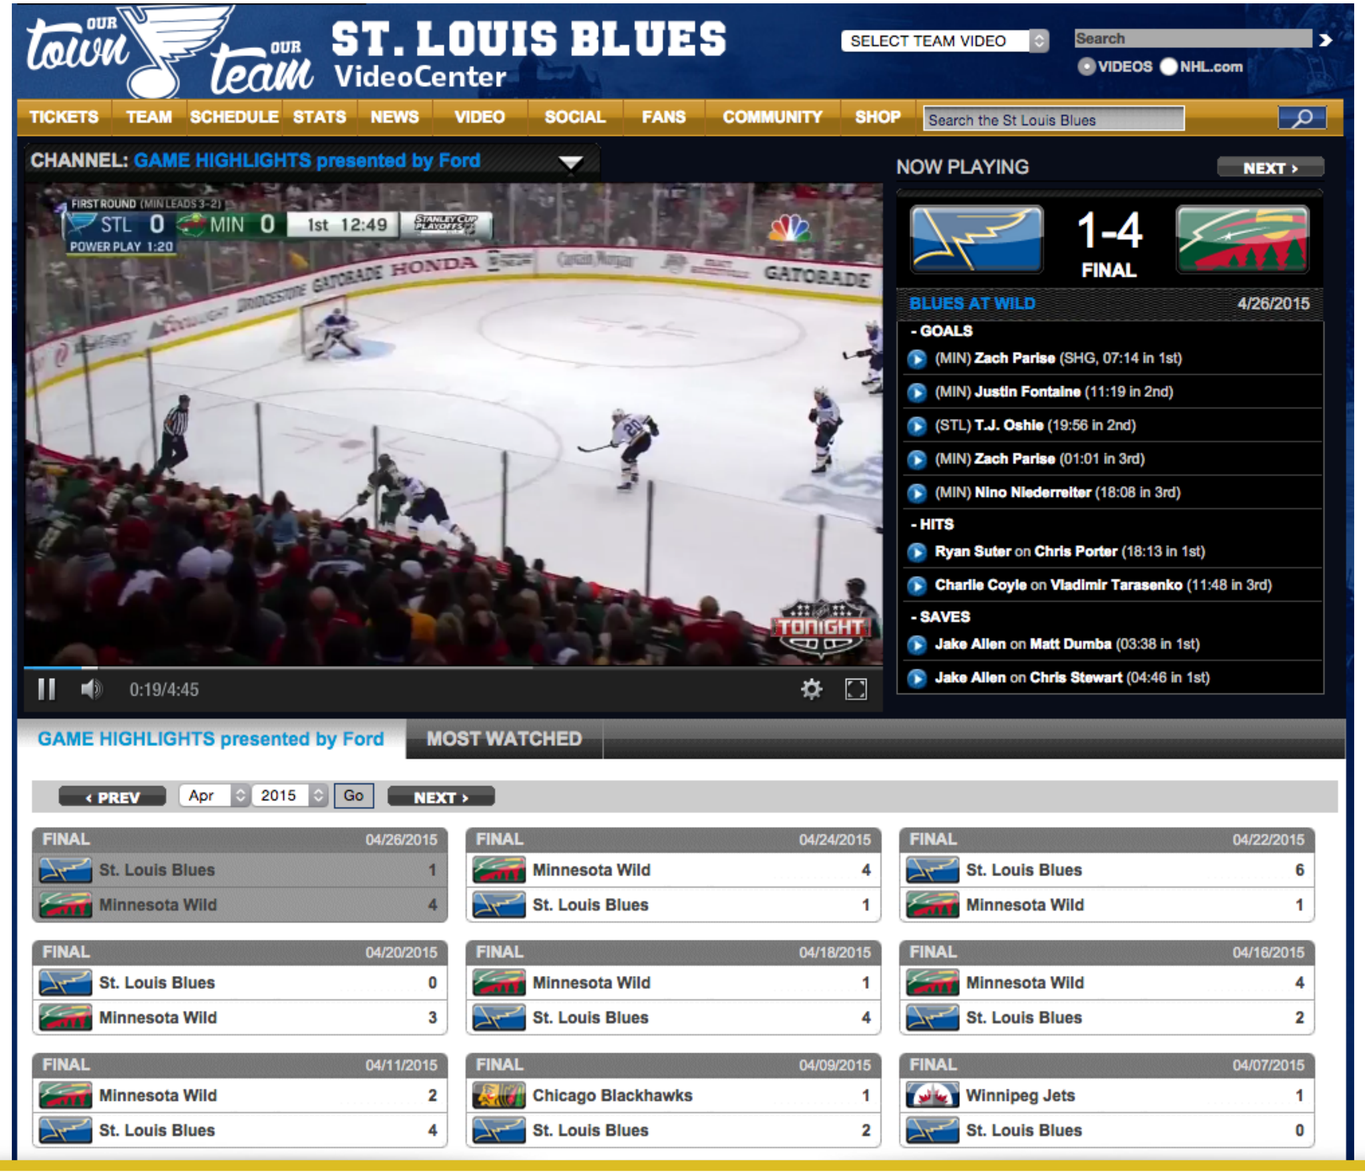


Alright, let's just go back to exploring the Video navigation menu.

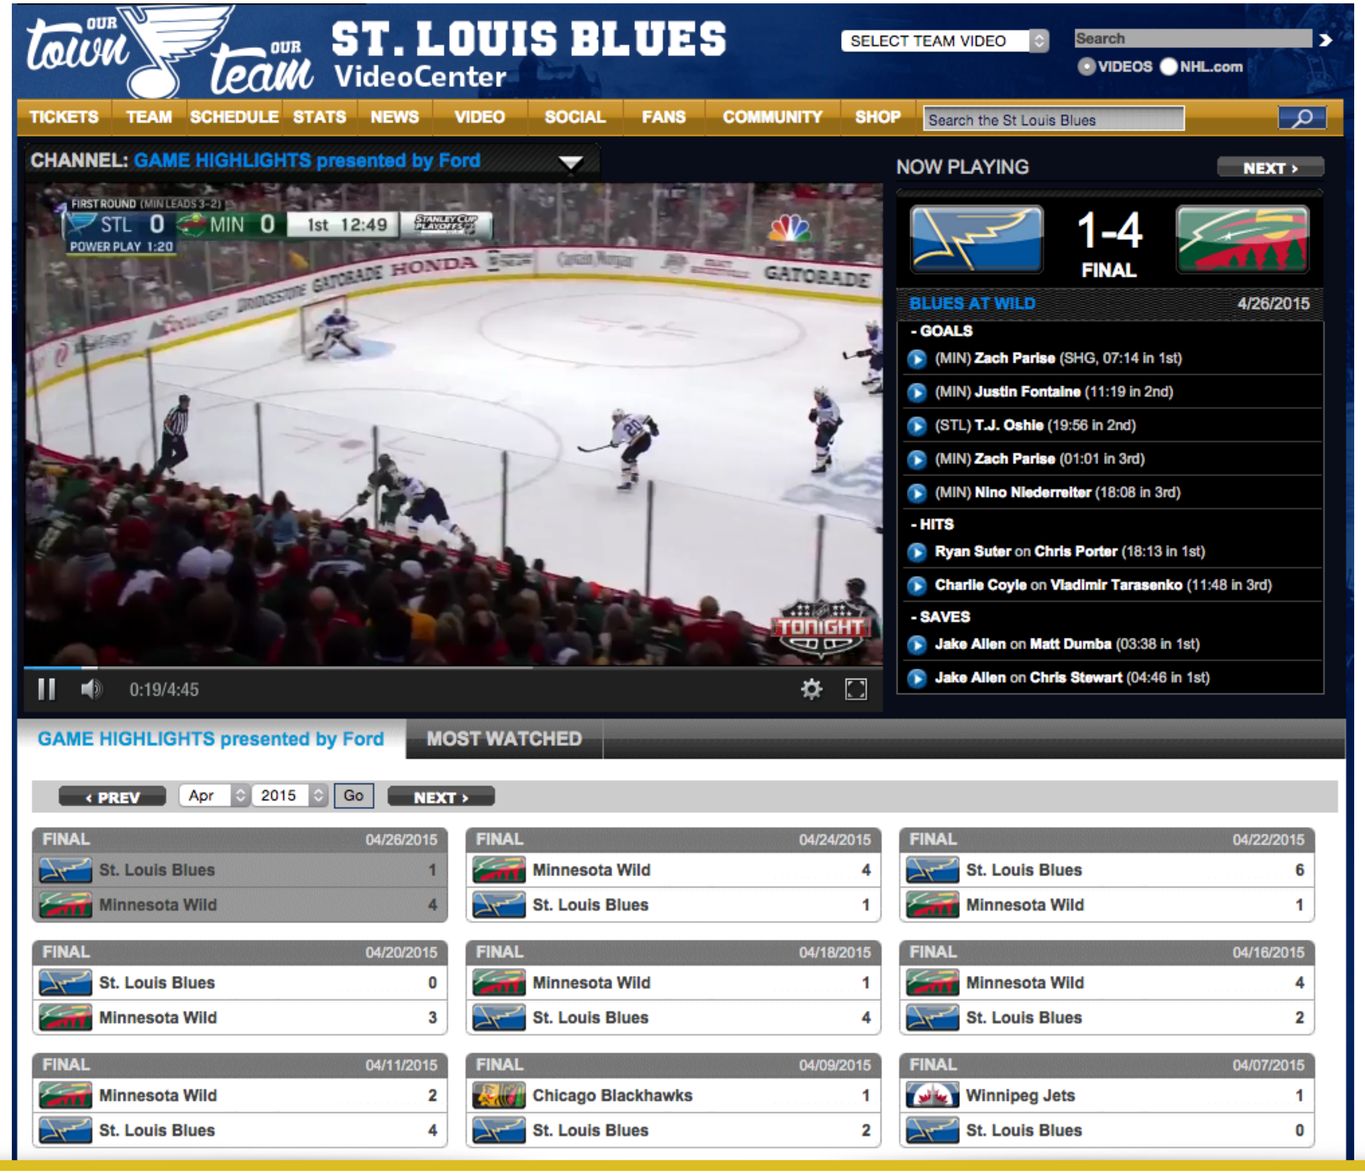
Alright, let's just go back to exploring the Video navigation menu.



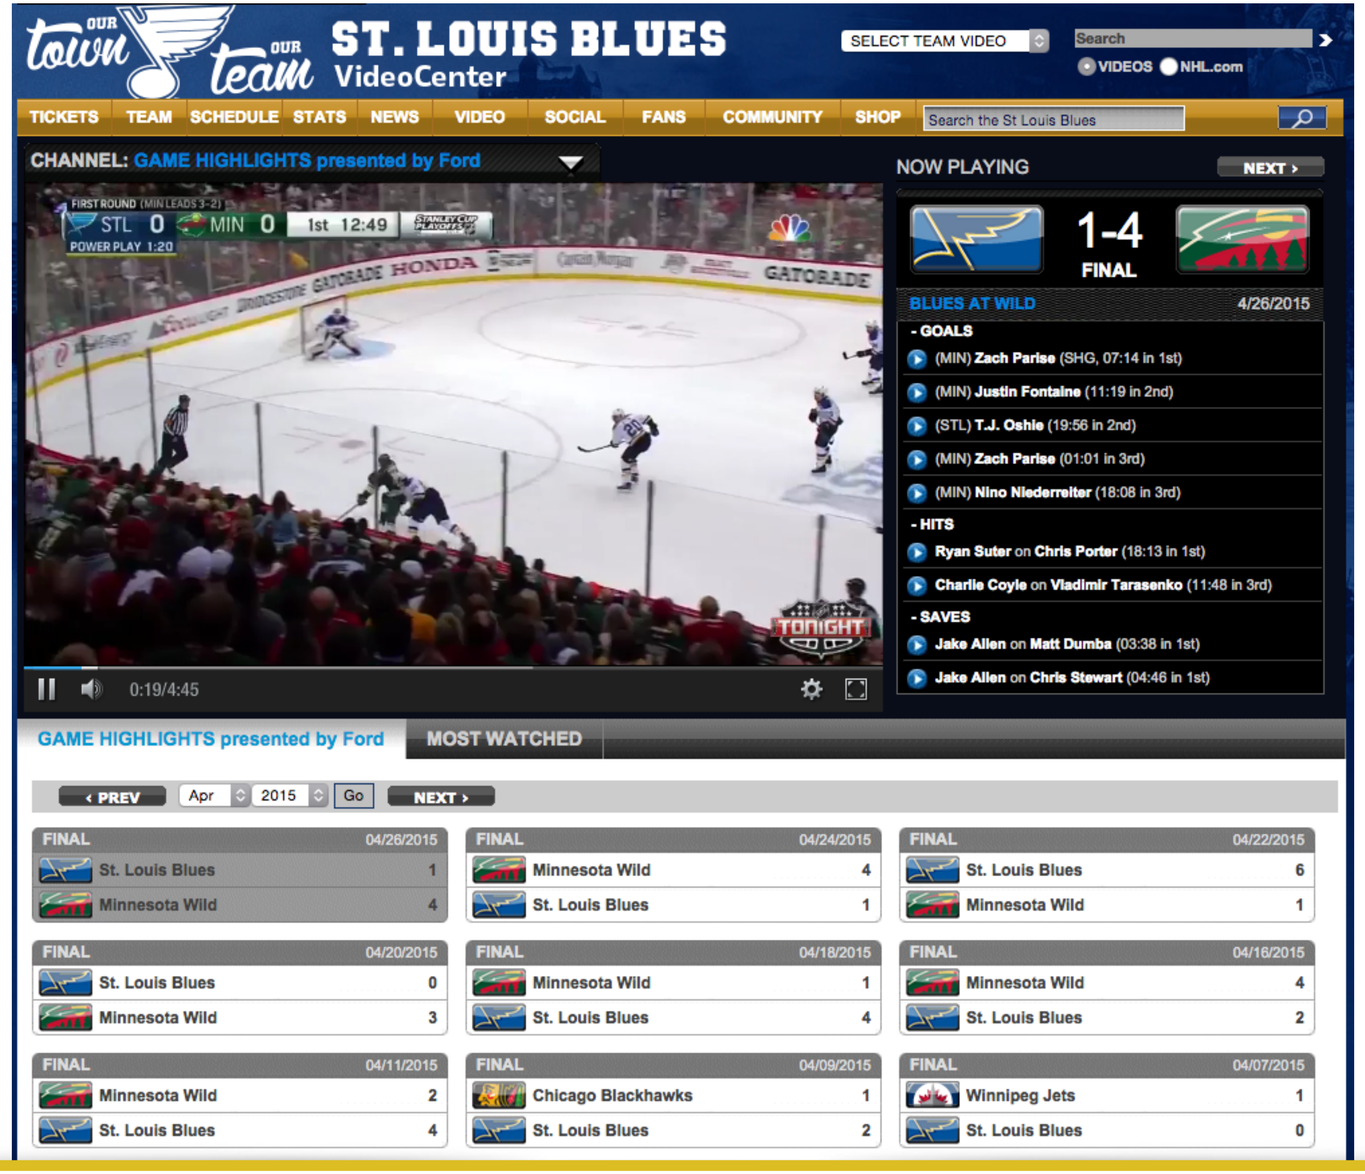
Wait a minute…



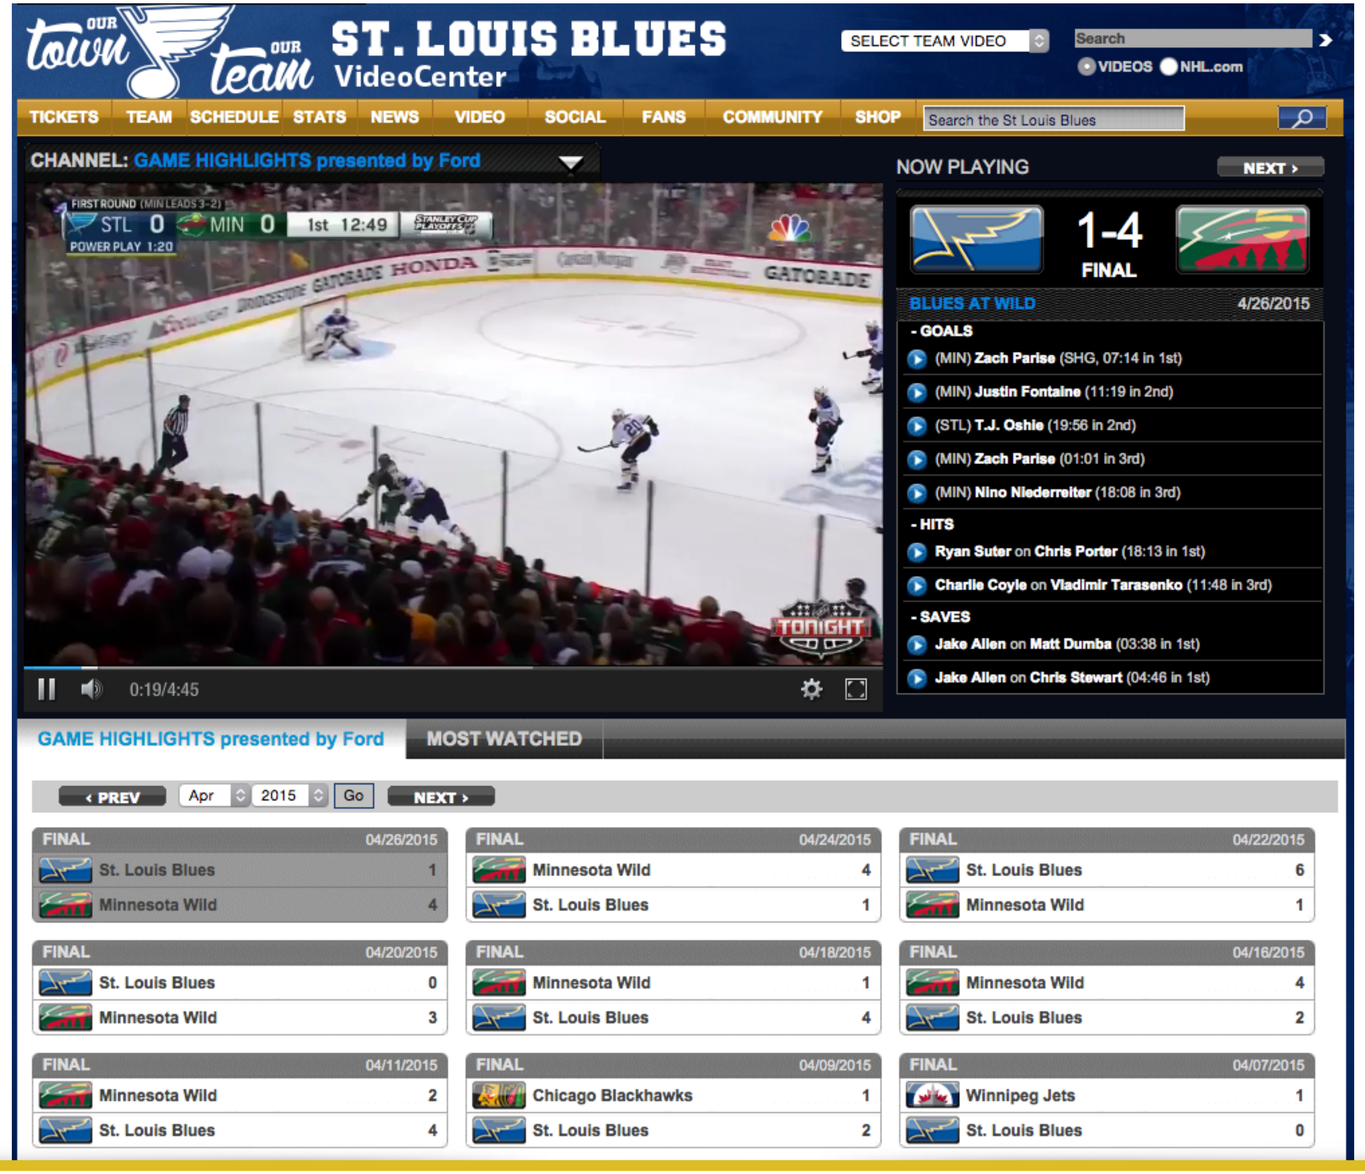
This looks familiar.



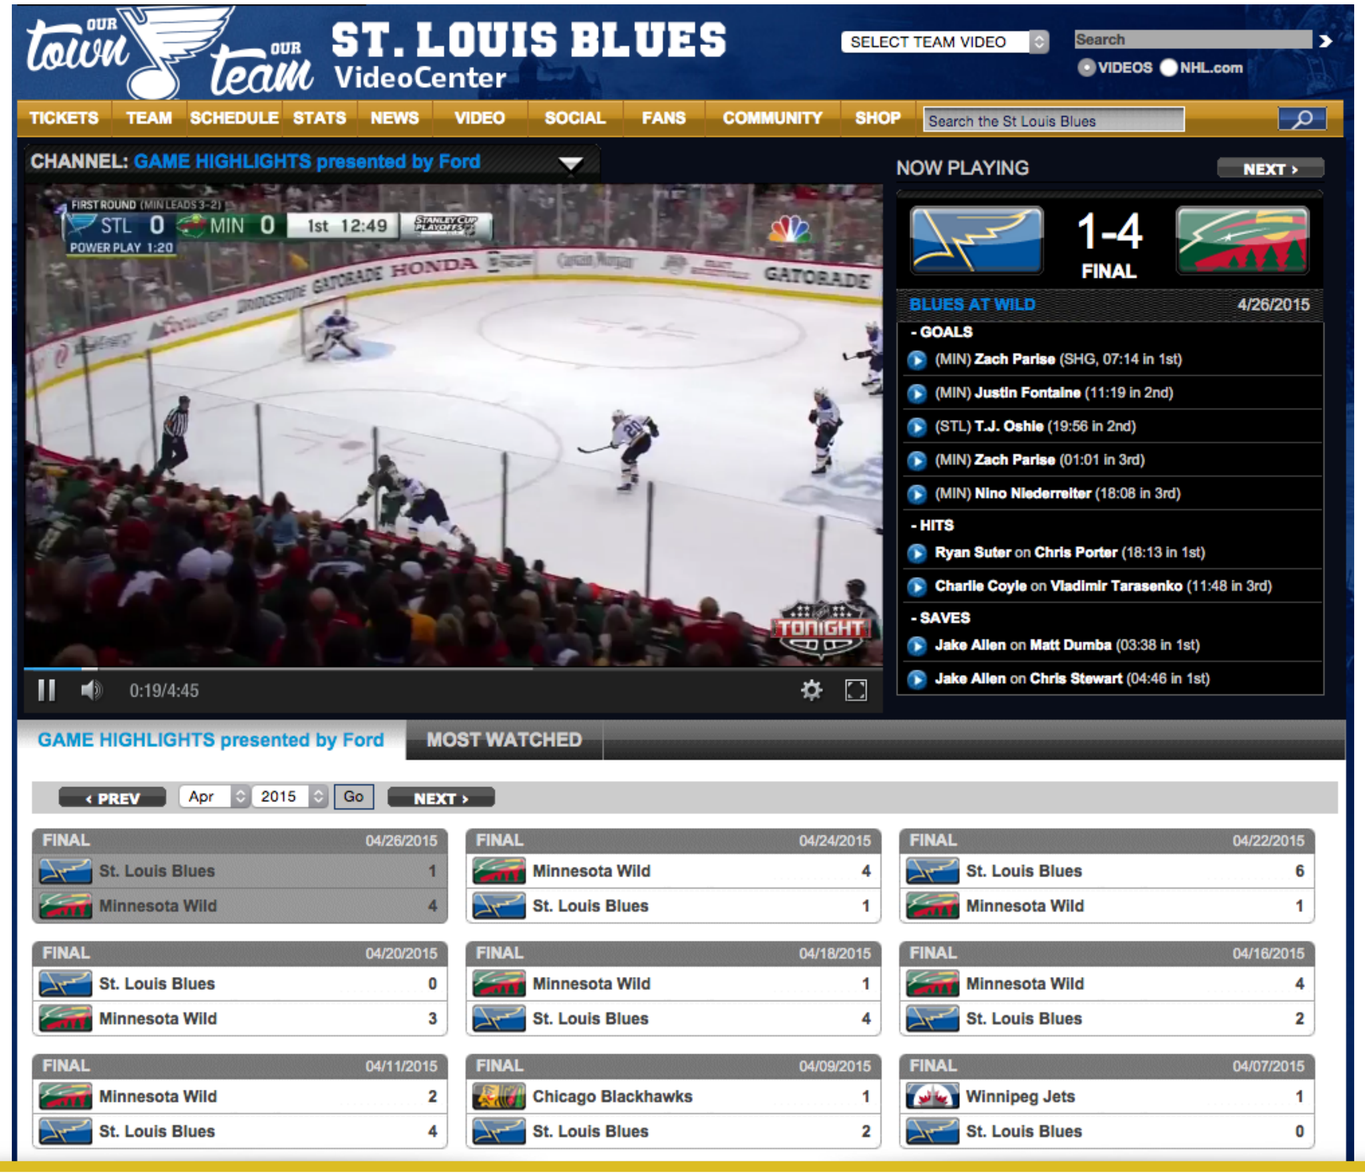
So “Game Highlights” is the default page for “Videos.



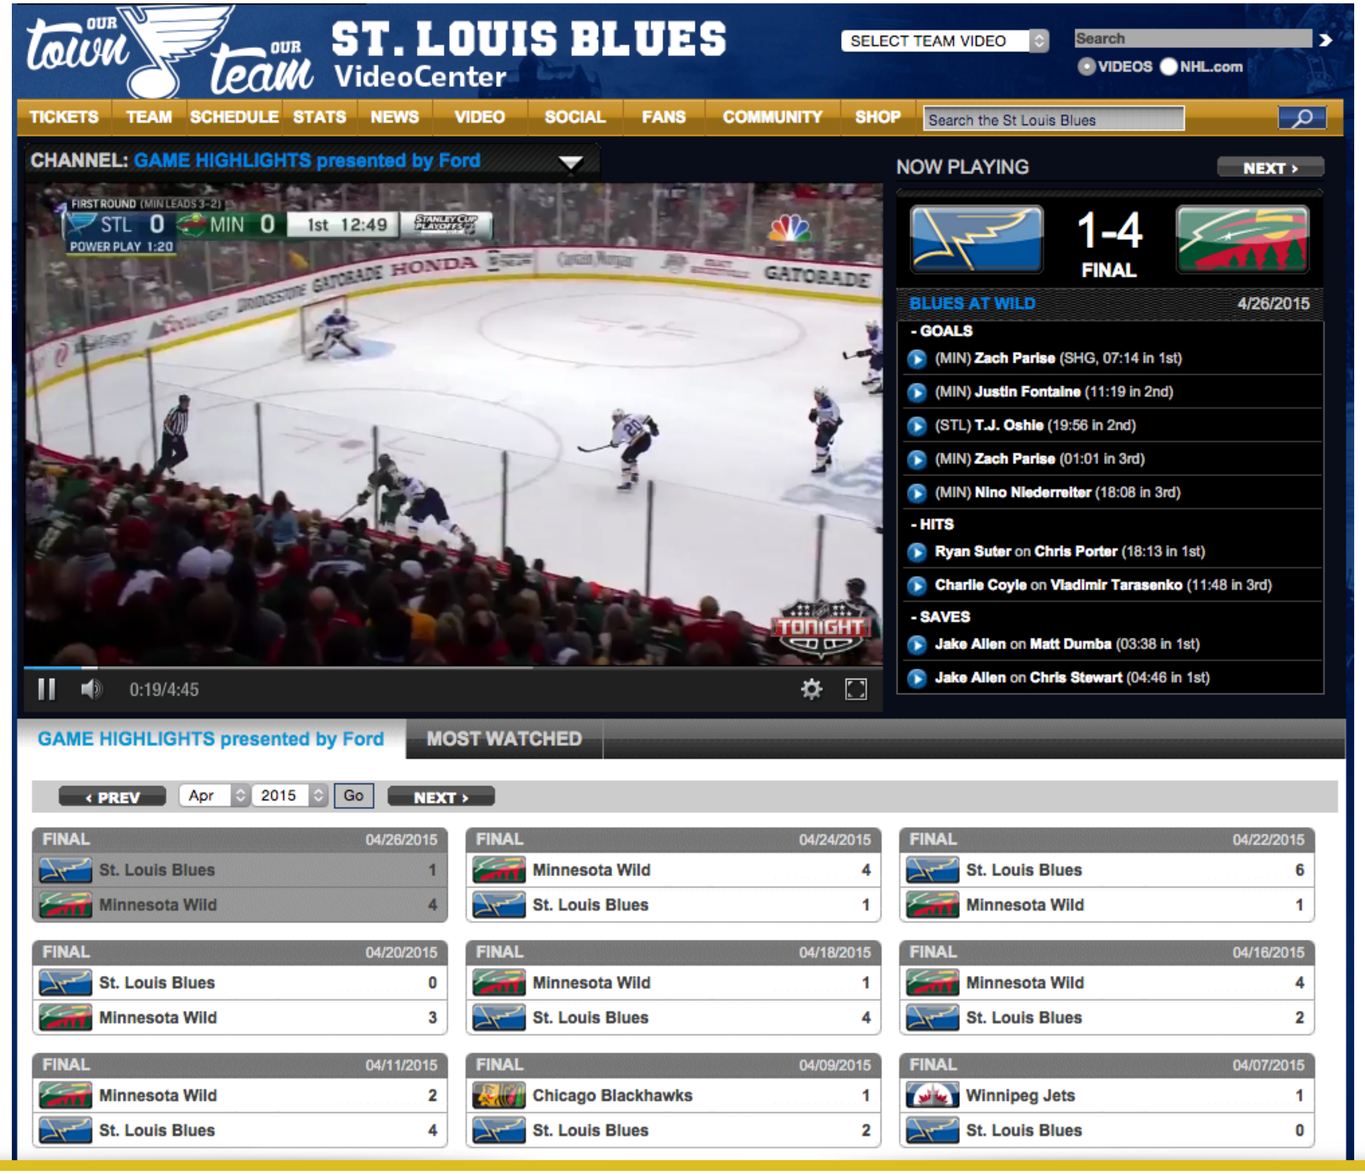
That's confusing.



Is there really no place to view all the videos across all the channels?



Or check out the most recently added video?



Let’s double check the navigation menu.

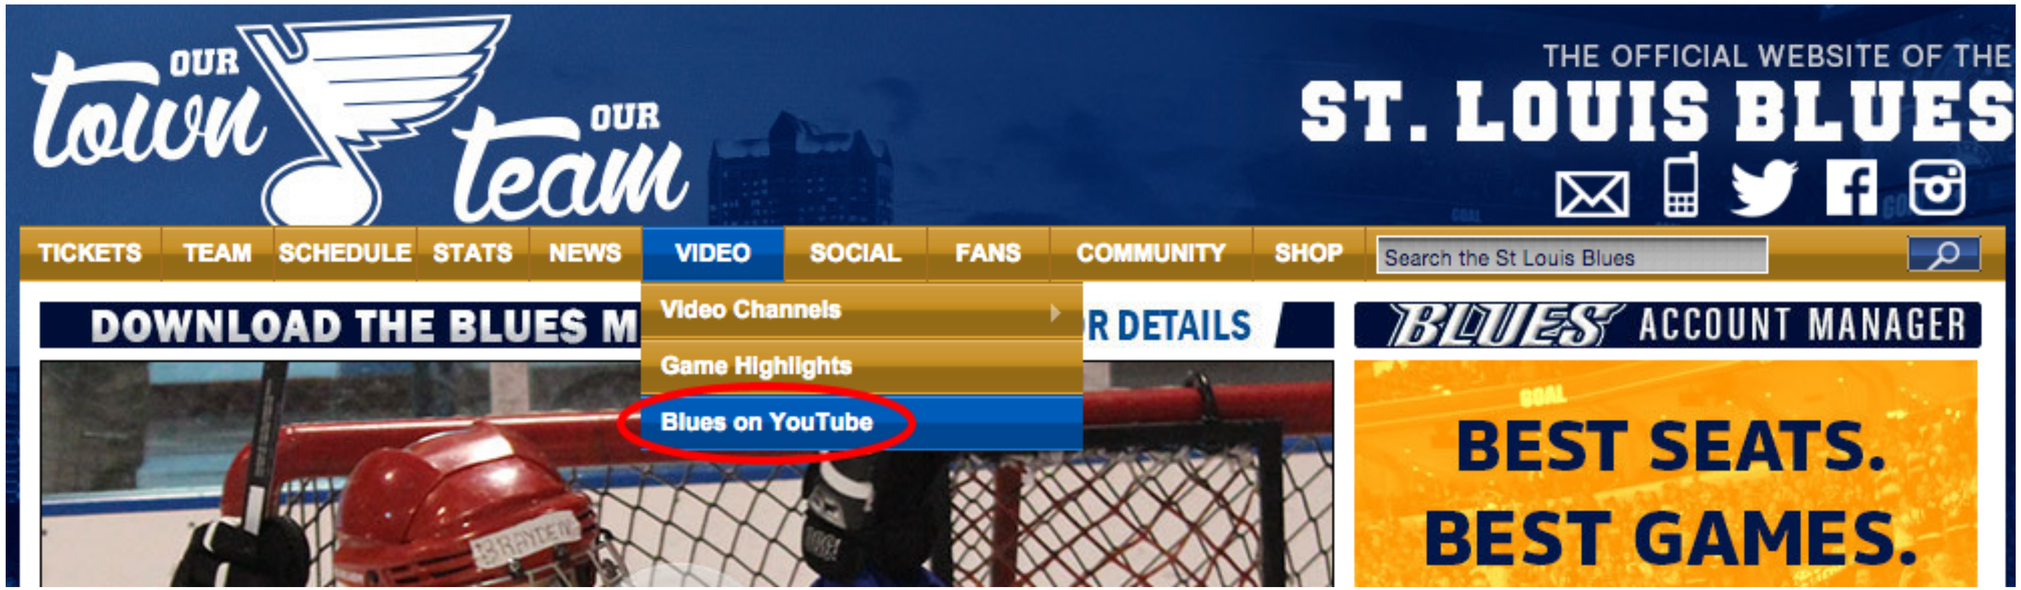
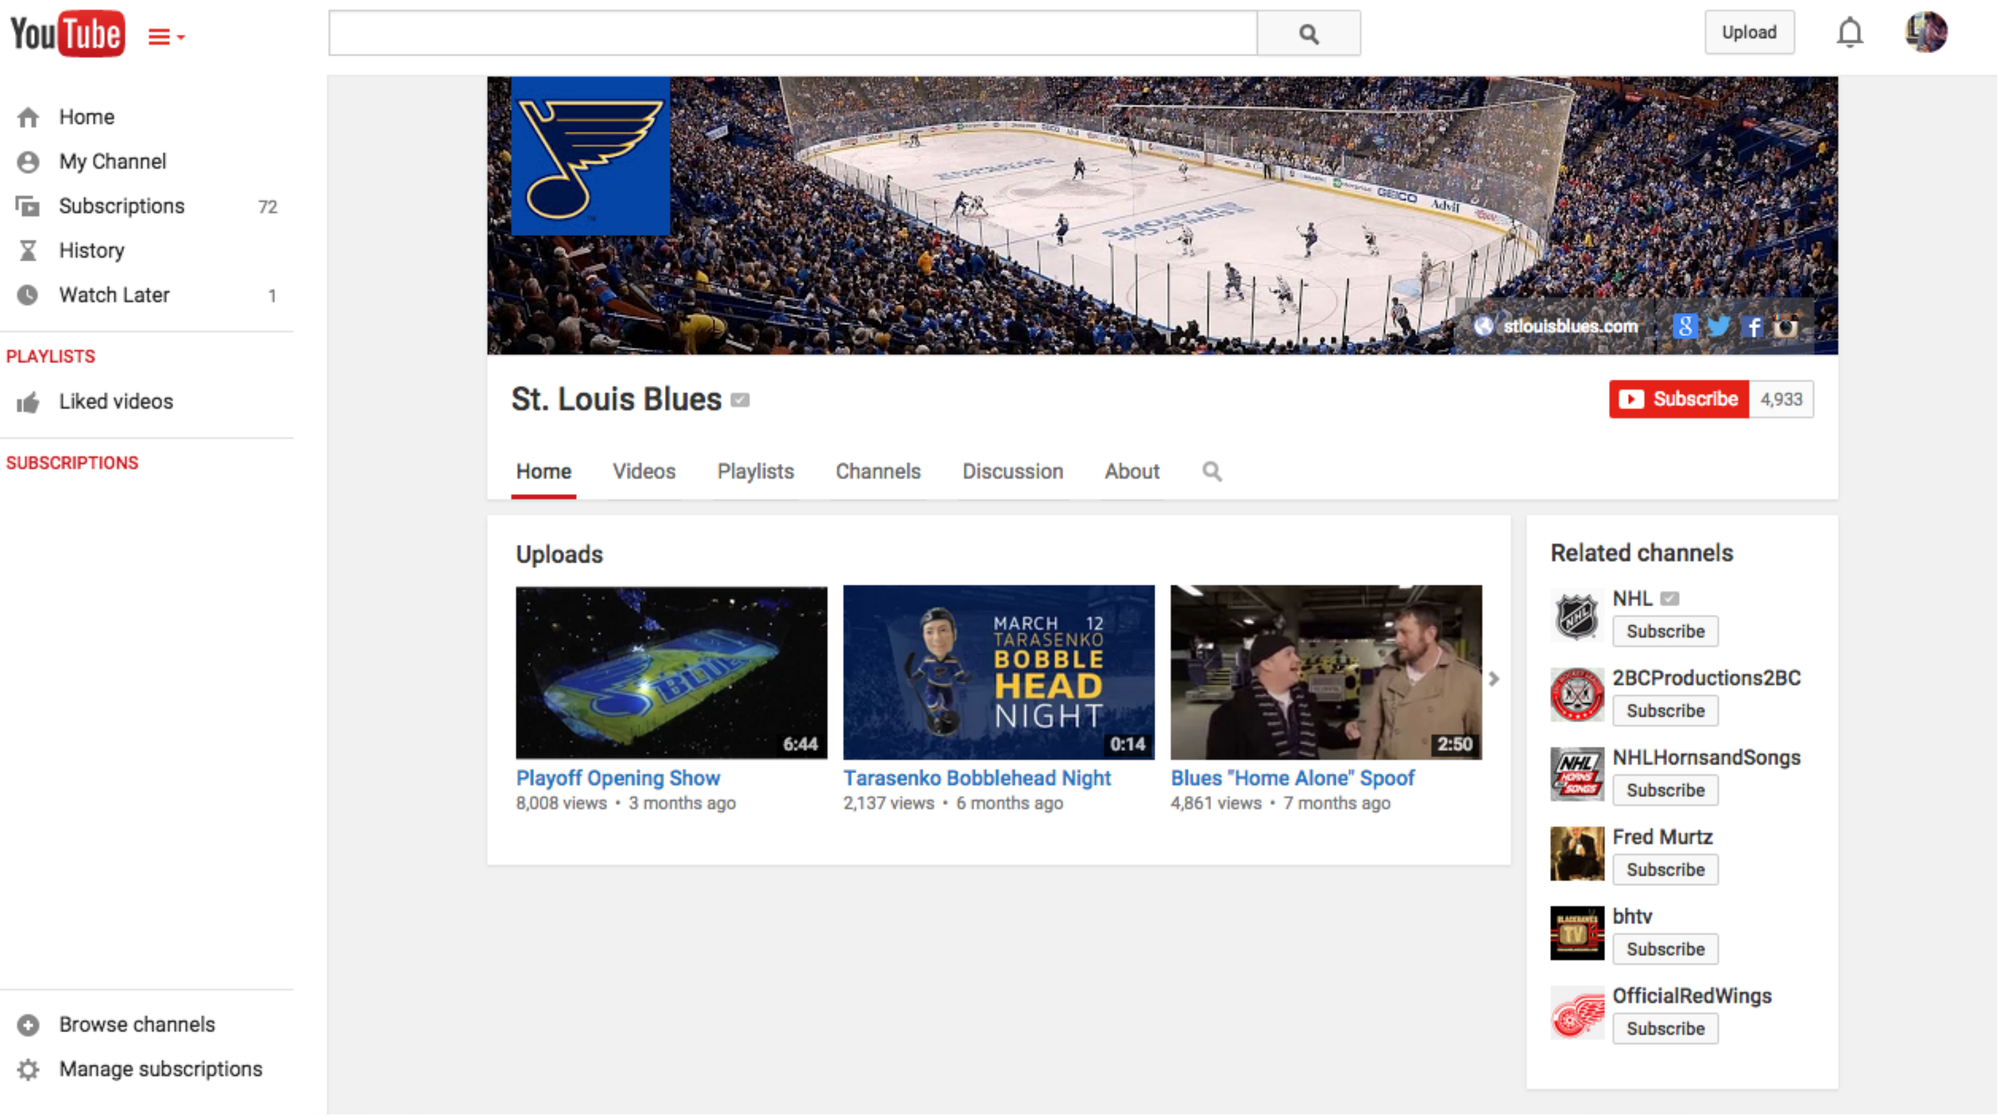
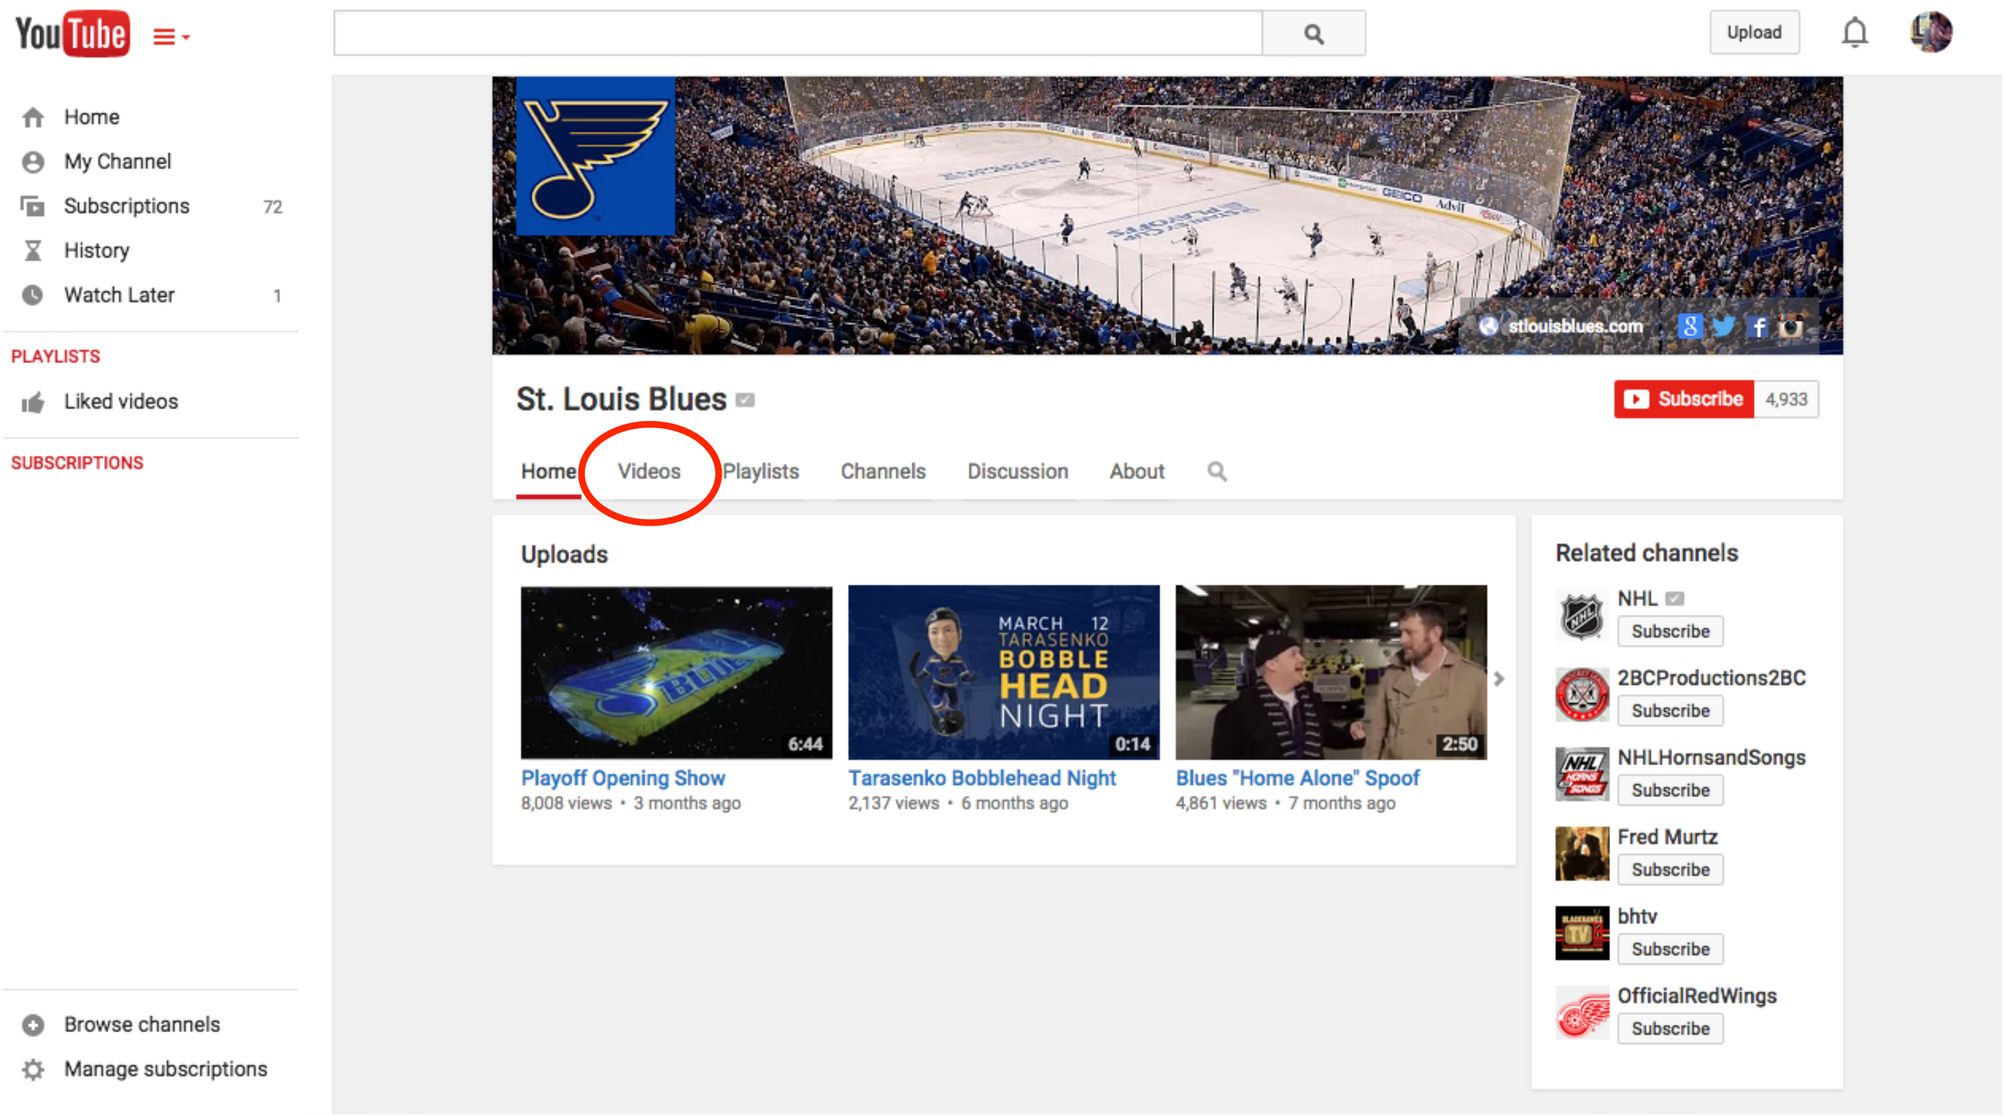
Nope, no dice.



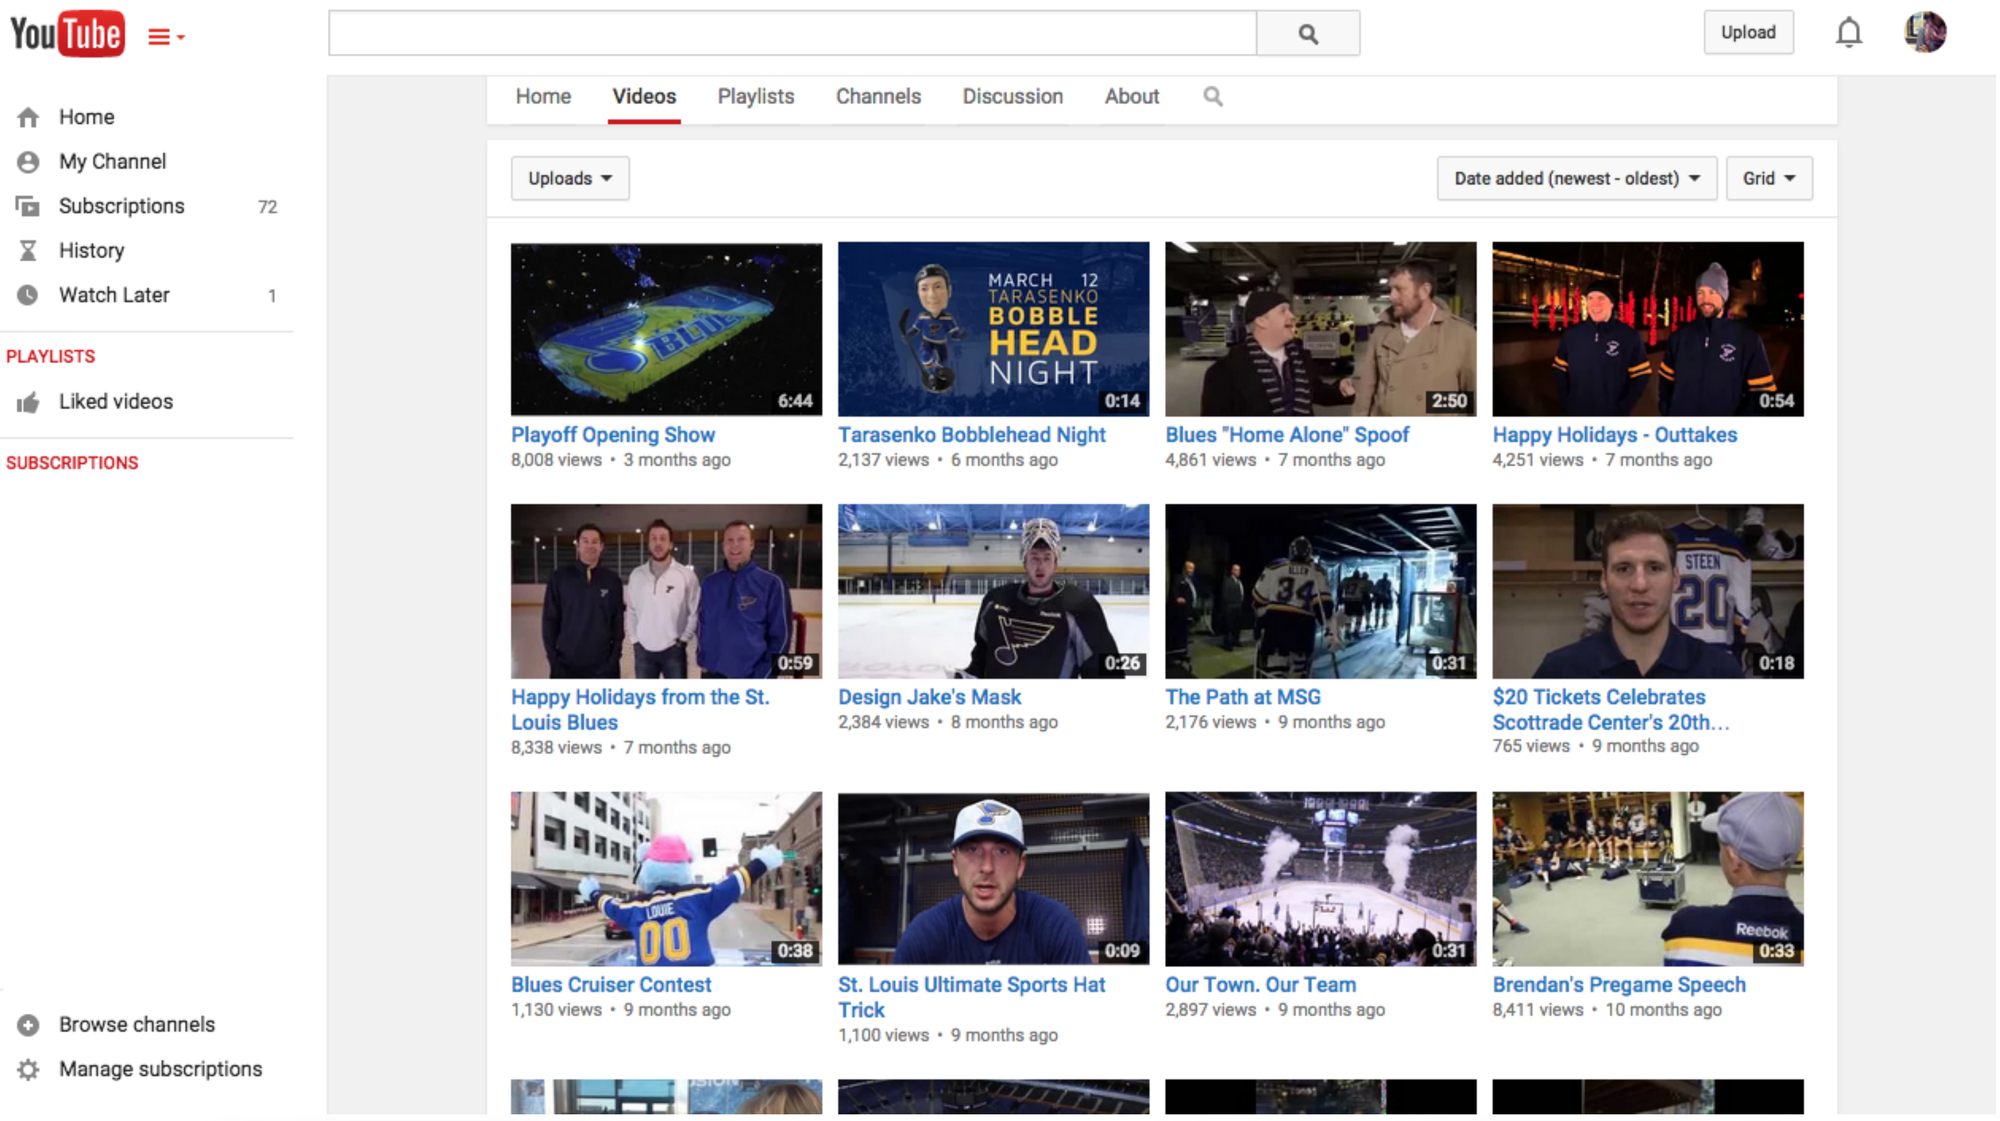
Let's just see that last option then.



Oh hello, new tab.



Are these new videos? Or the same videos?



I think… these are different videos?
